...SHINGTON, D. C. MAN WEDS KLEMME GIRL

...urch Beautifully Decorated In Holiday Spirit

Miss Gladys Elvira Wilson became the bride of Robert Porter Risser, of Washington, D. C., Thursday evening, Dec. 27th; the ceremony being ...nized in the First Methodist ...rch at Klemme, at eight o'clock ...he evening, by the pastor, Rev. ... Zabilka, in the presence of relatives and many of the immediate friends. Several selections on the violin were played by Miss Edna ...th, of Minnesota, accompanied at the piano by Miss Althea Richards of Clarion, who then played the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding ...rch, while the bridal party took ...r places. Rev. Zabilka took his ...e at the altar from the right, ...e the groom and his brother, ...erick, who acted as best man, entered from the left and took their places at the altar. From the rear of the church came the two ushers, ...r. Richard Hise and Mr. Quinn ...rnaday, of Des Moines. They ...e followed by the two bridesmaids, Miss Sally Taylor, of Guthrie ...nter, and Miss Helen Jones, of Clarion. Then came the maid of honor, Miss Margaret Gibson of Des Moines, followed by the bride, Miss Gladys, accompanied by her father, P. M. Wilson, who gave her in marriage.

The bride wore a white satin wedding dress and a long trailing veil with a lace cap, and carried a ...adenburg handkerchief which Mrs. Risser carried at her wedding. The bride wore white slippers and carried a shower bouquet of roses and ...lies of the valley. The groom and best man wore black dress suits. Both bridesmaids were dressed in pink silk crepe with slippers and turbans to match and carried a pink bouquet of roses. The maid of honor was dressed in blue silk crepe with slippers and turban to match and carried a yellow bouquet of roses.

The church was most beautifully decorated. The high arch had a continued row of evergreens all around adorned with white electric bulbs. There were four candelabra, each holding six lighted candles, and in front of these was an arch banked with evergreens, on each side of which stood two tall baskets of chrysanthemums. A large basket of chrysanthemums was on the piano. The aisles were lighted with candles all of which made a very beautiful setting for a wedding.

As the bridal party retired from the church Miss Althea Richards played Mendelssohn's wedding march.

A short reception was held at the Wilson home for all of the out-of-town guests. Pink ice cream, formed in lady slippers and wedding cakes were served. The bridal couple left immediately by automobile for Washington, D. C., where Mr. Risser has a position with the government, while he is attending the university.

Miss Wilson is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Wilson, of this city. Mr. Risser is the second son of Mrs. Sarah Porter Risser, of Des Moines. The bride is a graduate of the Klemme High School, having moved here from Vinton when a freshman. She is a graduate of Drake University and is a member of the Kappa Alpha Theta Sorority. Miss Wilson has been teaching for the past four years at Marion and Clarion, Iowa.

Mr. Risser is a graduate of Drake University and is taking a law course at George Washington University at Washington, D. C. He is a member of the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity. The couple met while attending college at Des Moines.

The Times joins with the community in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Risser prosperity, health and happiness in a long wedded life.

KLEMME LOST HEART-BREAKER TO VENTURA FIVE 29-27

Klemme and Ventura high school basketball teams put forth every effort into their game last Thursday evening, December 20th, on the local foor, but the Ventura quintet finally emerged victorious, 29-27.

Coyer, Ventura forward, was the outstanding player of the game. Seventeen times he made scoring attempts and on ten of them he was successful. The game was exceedingly close all the way through. The score was tied at the end of the first quarter 5-5 and at the end of the half 11-11. Ventura forged ahead in the third period and led 19-17. Both teams scored 10 more points in the 4th quarter. Coyer sank the winning basket in the last minute of play.

The Shamrocks continued to show good improvement and seemed to have overcome their last period let-down.

M. Barz led the scoring for the Klemme team with 5 field goals and a pair of free throws; Jorgenson tossed the other field goal; and Keeper sank three gift shots to complete the scoring.

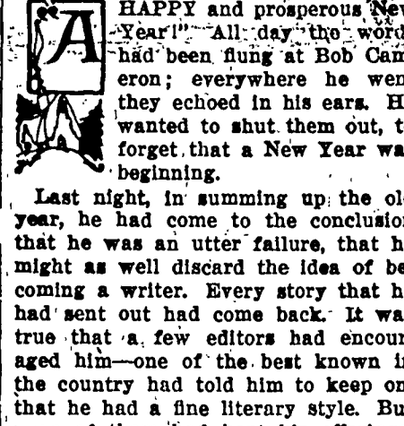
A HAPPY and prosperous New Year!" All day the words had been flung at Bob Cameron; everywhere he went they echoed in his ears. He wanted to shut them out, to forget that a New Year was beginning.

Last night, in summing up the old year, he had come to the conclusion that he was an utter failure, that he might as well discard the idea of becoming a writer. Every story that he had sent out had come back. It was true that a few editors had encouraged him—one of the best known in the country had told him to keep on, that he had a fine literary style. But none of them had kept his offerings.

Bob felt that the wisest thing he could do was to chuck the whole thing at the beginning of the New Year. Yet down in his heart he knew that writing was a part of him; that it would be an almost impossible task to keep away from the untidy desk back in his den. But he would have to do it, a man couldn't hold a girl to a promise, with nothing to offer her but failure.

Bob knew that Dorothy Trent was back of his resolution to quit the writing game. He loved Dorothy and she loved him. They had been engaged since their senior year at Northwestern. It was time that he should say something about marriage; it was not fair to hold her as he was doing. He would have to get a position that would enable him to keep a girl like



"It Will Be Glorious to Help You Work Out Your Career."

Dorothy; he couldn't ask her to exist on the meager pittance he was getting from the Pryor company. He had taken the job simply because it gave him so much time for writing, caring nothing at the time for the small salary and the lack of opportunity that it held.

The unhappiness brought by his resolve showed plainly in the weary droop of Bob's shoulders and the tired lines on his boyish face. He found it hard to join in the small talk and fun of the New Year's party that was going on. If Dorothy hadn't been so insistent upon his coming, he would have remained away, for he was in no mood for frivolity. And now, an even deeper bitterness had crept into his heart, as he watched the crowd pay tribute to Everett Elstun, the literary lion of Raymondville.

He wondered how Dorothy had got Elstun to her party; he was a bit of a recluse and seldom mingled with the crowd. He was surprised as he saw him walking across the room, with an eager look upon his face.

"How are you coming with your writing?" he asked.

Bob gave a mirthless laugh. "I've just decided that as a writer I'm a pretty good hod-carrier. The fact of the matter is, Mr. Elstun, I've made a New Year's resolution to quit."

"Giving up in a hurry?" Elstun said, a trifle sharply.

"I've been trying for almost two years," Bob answered.

"And you think a few hours every now and then for two years should have brought you success? Listen, boy, I was writing full time for more than three years before I got a hint that I wasn't wasting ink."

In a moment Bob was confessing his real reason for quitting. Elstun listened quietly, then he spoke. "I, too, had that problem," he said. "There was a girl; I felt sure she wouldn't be satisfied with what I had to offer. Fortunately, I found out in time she wanted to share my struggles. Maybe the girl you love feels the same way."

Bob found that Elstun was right. Dorothy was aghast at the thought of his giving up the work he loved, or doubting that she would want to share his poverty. "It will be glorious to help you work out your career," she assured him.

So a new resolution was made that called for success instead of failure. The New Year was going to bring Bob the acceptances that he craved.

Pretty Good World

Scientists studying evolution predict that mankind will become perfectly adapted to its environment in about 5,000,000 years. If it is going to take as long at that, we can afford to yield briefly to the holiday spirit and say blithely that this is a pretty good world—that for one so young it has done a good deal and has never behaved itself better than right now.—Woman's Home Companion.

Eyes Reveal Age

How the eyes may indicate age is revealed through the studies of Dr. Heinz Steinhaus, of Leipzig, Germany, on the relation of old age to the type of farsightedness known as presbyopia. This German scientist found, from a detailed study of many cases, that in persons in whom presbyopia is less than average, life expectancy is much greater than in those in whom it is above the average. In persons between the ages of forty and fifty the difference is as much as ten years.

Indians Fought Over Buffalo

With buffalo meat for food, buffalo hides for clothes and lodges, buffalo bones, horns and sinews for fashioning weapons, tools and implements—small wonder that the mighty animal became a strong motive in Indian rituals and ceremonies. Early Indian wars, especially between the mountain Indians (Utes) and those of the plains (Arapahoes and Cheyennes) came about, says Nature Magazine, through contests for the choice buffalo hunting grounds.

MRS. ANNA BAACK PASSED AWAY DECEMBER 20

Was Resident of Klemme Territory For Fifty Years

Mrs. Anna Baack, nee Moldenhauser, was born on the 5th day of July, 1861, at Rehburg, Mecklenburg Strelitz, Germany. She was brought to Holy Baptism by her parents, July 25, in the Lutheran church at Rehburg As a child she visited the school of her village and at the age of sixteen she was confirmed. She then prepared herself for the profession of nursing, serving about five years at the Krankenhaus hospital at Hamburg. In January, 1883, she was united in holy wedlock to William Baack.

The young couple migrated to America the same year. Upon arriving here, they remained with an uncle, John Walker, at Garner, for a few months and then rented a farm south of Garner. Here they lived five years. Mr. Baack then purchased a farm two miles northeast of Klemme.

Seven sons and three daughters were born into their home, of whom two—a son and a daughter died in infancy. In the year 1900 the father met with a fatal accident while cutting grain. His horses ran away and he was injured to such an extent that he died soon after. The entire burden of managing the farm was now shifted on the shoulders of the mother and the older children. Mrs. Baack remained on the farm until 1914, when she moved to Klemme to live with her daughter, Mrs. Martin Brinkman.

Mrs. Baack was a faithful member of the Klemme Reformed church. She was regular in attending divine services and nothing pleased her more than to see her children and grandchildren in the house of worship. She was also a member of the adult class of our Sunday School. Mr. Baack, at the time of his death was an elder of the congregation.

For about a year Mrs. Baack had an ailment which the doctor diagnosed as a severe case of neuralgia. An operation was performed at the hospital at Iowa City last winter, but this relieved her but little.

After days of suffering, she fell asleep Thursday evening at about 10 o'clock at the age of 73 years, 5 months and 15 days.

Surviving her and mourning her death are her children: Mrs. J. Weintz, Wild Rose, N. D.; William, Klemme; Gustave, Sheboygan, Wis.; Otto, Tracy, Minn.; Herman, Klemme; Rudolph, Sheboygan, Wis.; August, Klemme; Mrs. Martin Brinkman, Klemme. She leaves one brother living in Germany; twenty-six grandchildren; two great grandchildren and many other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held Monday, December 24 at 1:30 o'clock at the Klemme Reformed church in Klemme with Rev. C. Grosshuesch in charge. Burial was made in Klemme cemetery.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FARM BUREAU HELD DEC. 20

Farm Bureau Delegation Approves AAA Program

The Annual County Farm Bur... meeting held on Thursday, Dec... ber 20th at the Odd Fellow's hall. Garner put the Farm Bureau on record as definitely approving the present National Recovery Program in the following resolution:

"We approve the principle of the adjustment program as the best method up to date to obtain and maintain parity for Agriculture and the retention of the processing tax as the best method yet devised for making the tariff effective to Agriculture."

A. B. Kline, executive committeeman of the State Federation, emphasized the fact if we are to maintain a balanced abundance in agriculture, then that agricultural people, the largest single industrial group in the world had to do it in an organized way. Mr. Kline illustrated vividly numerous changes that have taken place, and that progressive people as we are, have brought about these changes. There is no overproduction of manufactured goods, as there is of agricultural goods. Organized agriculture can bring about the proper distribution and social adjustments if they have a desire to do so.

Ben V. Greiman was elected vice-president, Herman Gelner, treasurer and Earl Ruka, secretary.

Ben V. Greiman was also re-elected as chairman of the boys 4-H club committee.

Township directors approved were Madison, Carl Johnson; Ellington Fred Meinecke; Concord, Walter Woiwood; Garfield, O. N. Johnston; Orthel, Lyle Fox; Liberty, Franklin Bredlow; Ell, C. J. Wille; Avery, Harry Ostendorf.

Mrs. Herman Gelner, girls 4-H club chairman gave a brief and interesting report of the activities of the girls clubs in the county. Miss Chollett, home demonstration agent, and Mr. Oberhauser, county agent, gave a summary of the work of the past year.

The election of Mrs. L. F. Weaver county home project chairman and Mrs. Herman Gelner, county girls chairman was approved.

THE town hall of the small village of Landers had no clock, but a bell in the cupola. The janitor was one of those fussy fellows who make a positive creed of doing everything on the dot. He kept his watch set "railroad time," consequently when the old man entered the hall in the morning, every one knew it was exactly one minute of seven. The selectmen met there. The offices of the probate judge were on the second floor. The town hall had to be kept warm. When the janitor left at night it was exactly five minutes past six. At six the bell pealed out its only ringing for the day, and people set their watches by it.

Old Foxton had a cubby-hole of his own where he could rest and smoke when he wasn't busy. It was the custom on New Year's eve for the town hall bell to ring out at midnight. Though many enthusiastic youngsters would have liked to send the joyous clanging out over the roofs of the town, Old Foxton would have none of it. That day he stayed seventeen hours in the town hall. But nothing is settled or sure, even in a small, well-regulated village.

One of the youths who had long coveted the fun of New Year's eve bell-ringing held a conference with a friend. "Have you ever thought," said this enterprising young man, "what a joke it would be to have the whole town late for a day?"

His friend cocked up his ears.

"It's possible for one individual to send the lives of a thousand people into a tail-spin of unpunctuality . . . over a mere matter of ten minutes." They stared at each other, a slow grin growing on their faces. "You pull the right lever and then watch. In this case the right lever is old Foxton." They went into a huddle of secret planning.

At twelve that night they were to hold especial celebration. They could count on Old Foxton. The moment the big bell began to clang . . . that would be the first instant of the first minute of the New Year. Exactly! There was something fine and dependable in the thought of Old Foxton, they said. Gave you confidence in the human race. He was as right as Father Time himself.

At one minute of twelve, where parties were in progress, every one stopped talking. They waited expectantly. The minute hand crept on to twelve. Lips were opened in readiness to shout with the first ringing of the great bell. But no sound came clanging over the roof-tops . . . only the small tinkles of their own clocks chiming the hour.

SILENCE! Nothing more.

They couldn't believe it. For forty years that bell had been rung precisely on the dot. The little clock-bells ceased their chimes. The minute hand crept by the hour. All the awaited thrill collapsed miserably.

"I'll tell you what it is," cried some one, "We're wrong . . . our time is fast!"

They waited. At ten minutes past the hour the big bell sounded its twelve deep notes. Clocks were set back ten minutes. Even those people awakeped from their sleep looked at their watches and set them right with the bell.

Next day confusion reigned—often annoying but not serious. Radio programs were tuned in ten minutes after their beginning.

Two solemn youths, unnaturally grave, were exhibiting their watches to this and that unconvinced citizen. "But you're wrong, both of you," declared every one. "We were all wrong. We know it because we set our clocks by the midnight bell."

The boys raised surprised eyebrows. "But we," they said, "have correct 'railroad' time. Nobody in Landers is right . . . but us!"

It came out at last. It had to, of course. Old Foxton sputtered to his wife. His wife told a neighbor. The news ran like wildfire. Though inclined to be scandalized at first, the whole town laughed. It came to be considered a capital joke . . . if never repeated.

Twenty minutes before midnight the janitor in his cubby-hole found himself bound, and not too roughly gagged. His watch was removed from his pocket and held before his eyes. The minutes ticked themselves away until twelve. The old man writhed in his bonds. Not a sound from the steeple.

Five minutes past . . . ten minutes past the hour. Then the slow clanging of twelve strokes.

Foxton never discovered who kept him in his chair or who rang the bell. Bandit-wise a handkerchief swathed all but the eyes of his jailer. When the last stroke sounded, the stranger untied Foxton's arms. He swiftly left, locked the door, and threw the key through the transom. By the time the old man had freed himself there wasn't so much as a sound in the entire building.

"It's a good idea, just the same," remarked one solemn youth to another, "for a person not to be right all of the time!"

And then they laughed . . . but never told.

Grange Writes Interesting Letter From England

Pateley Bridge
Yorkshire, Eng.

Dear Ray and Friends:

Today is Dec. the 16th Sunday, so that it might be a good time to drop a line. Will start from New York, passing out of the Harbor and saying Goodbye to the dear old Statue of Liberty (How often in the next 13 days if I could have said, "Hello old girl, we are back"). The shore line with New York's tall buildings has not passed out of the picture before we were rolling pretty good.

We left port at 11 a. m. and I guess for luncheon the first day was the only time that all were out. From then on we had some time for 13 days. Side winds for about seven days that blew us off the course and shook everything loose and piled it up on one side and then the other. Not only the furniture, etc., but us landlubbers, that were about, as well. Maybe you can get some idea how rough it was if I tell you that the rugs when standing on them would slide with you from side to side. I stood this about four or five days and so did Dad, then we decided to get sick and have it over with. My sickness lasted about ten minutes, and Dad's the same, and then we figured that we would be good sailors the balance of the way, but about the eighth day out we hit some terrible head on winds and this created a "new" motion which caused the ship to be slowed up to keep it from being pounded to pieces. There were several other larger vessels in our immediate territory and they were not doing any better than we, so had some consolation, we had company at least.

About the 3rd day of this head wind business I decided I was still a poor sailor and spent another ten minutes feeding the fish, but for the next day or so the smell of food from the kitchen made me duck for fresh air. Dad stuck to his room and bed pretty close as the lurching of the boat would have been too much for him.

I managed to get a few pictures run off but later found that the continual knocking around had loosened the film from the winding roller and will be no good. They told us that the wind was blowing about 100 miles per hour at its worst and that we had "hove to" for about 24 hours to avoid the storm center. In 2 days run they gave us 70 miles & I rather think they should have deducted it instead of marking it ahead. The night before we got to the Irish coast they had an awful land swell or roll (another new one) but this we were able to stand alright.

Finally we got into Liverpool and after several hours of being pushed thru this dock and that gate we finally docked. Then the British Inspectors come on board and looked our passports over and ourselves as well and gave us our O. K. Then we disembarked to be met by the custom officials who seemed to think maybe the moving picture machine was a gangsters weapon or some thing until I showed him and told him how old it was and he finally said alright.

That off our "chest" we took a taxi for the New Cathedral they are building in Liverpool. They figure on 40 years more before completion. That is some place and while there we waited for services which to me were very impressive. They were in the part which is completed. From Liverpool we went to Chester thru the Mersey tunnel. As we enter from New York we went through the land tunnel and will say that they are alike as two peas, only the Mersey, I believe, is longer, but I think there is more traffic through the Holland in one hour than there is in the Mersey in three. One should not miss going through these tunnels if he has the chance.

We are now at Chester, a very old city of about 40,000 people with a wall built around it. This wall was built in the eary days for protection and has been kept in wonderful state of repair. We walked around on the wall and am convinced that it would be a wonderful view in the summer, but it was foggy and wet while there. Chester has a very old Cathedral, black as the ace of spades, both inside and out, Of course, I suppose most anything would get black under the climatic conditions as they are here, in say, four or five thousand years.

From Chester we went to the country for a few days. Saw the sun a couple of times for about ten minutes each and while out one is surely surprised how wonderful the valleys look. They really have had no killing frost and the valley is a rich green. The trees are bare but with the grass green it gives one an idea of what the country might look like in the summer. I surely would like to see England during the summer months, but never again this time of the year.

We now jump back to Manchester by train (1 penny per mile and return, 2c per mile our money). This is where my father was born. We stayed here for a few days, visited the movies and to our surprise found nearly all American pictures. Most or part of each show we had already seen back home. Pictures are one item that they can't say "Buy British." Saw a couple of "All British" pictures, but not so hot, and the British do not like them any too well. They want American pictures. They say the English producers are too tight. Won't spent the money to put the scenery into the pictures.

From Manchester we went on to Harrogate, a resort for the sick; baths, etc. We did not stop on account of our health, but needed the bath. This would be a wonderful place in the summer and hear that it is well attended. The place is full of hotels, but not very well patronized at this time of the year.

From Harrogate we came to this place. My Dad stayed here with his grandmother 70 years ago. The old house is still intact and he showed me about where he played when a kid; now mostly all buildings. Pateley Bridge is in what is called the Ned Valley and a very lovely spot, no doubt, in the summer. You will note I always say in the summer as I cannot convince myself that it is lovely in the winter. We have been in England about 2 weeks and not an hours decent weather. Don't know how long we will stay here but would like to get a look at this Ned Valley in the clear weather. Down through this valley runs the river Ned which provides the sportsman with trout if he can catch them.

Just a line or two about some of the things which seem peculiar to me. The first hair cut and shave to me was a killing affair. Had an awful job finding the barber shop. It's a back room trade seemingly. Chairs more antique than that old, old one Baumgartner had, if you remember that one. No comfort in going to an "All British" barber shop. Hair cut was terrible; worse than Jim's poorest, and when he got through shaving I was rather skinned than shaved, and that was all there was to it. They don't even wipe the soap off. And to think that the Hotel Manager directed me to the best shop in the City of 40,000. Sure would not like to get into their poorest.

See if you can get this one. What is a W. C.? If you can't dope it out ask Erny Helps, Ted or Walt Reed. Will stop for the present. Just a chance that the sun may come out for a minute and don't want to miss it. Do really believe we could sell American canned sunshine to these "Buy British."!

Yours truy,
Paul Grange

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Larsen and family drove to Garden City Monday and spent New Years Day with the Yahnke and Stokesbary families.

Several pupils from various grades are taught by Miss Ritter during the forenoon and discusion of new methods is taken up in the afternoon. Supt. PAUL GRANGE SENDS US AN ENGLISH NEWSPAPER

This office is in receipt of an English newspaper, Telegraph & Argus, published at Bradford, England and sent us by Paul Grange.

English newspapers are just the reverse of the American product. The "front page news" appears on the back page, while the classified and want ads are all on the front page.

We find a few American products for sale, such as Ingersoll watches, and Krueschen Salts Practically all of the movies are American pictures The cars advertised include the Singer, the Morris and the Vauxhall light six. The latter is sold by the Grange Motor Co. (Perhaps some relation of Paul.) They advertise their cars as having independent springing, free-wheel suspension, no-draught ventilation and synchro-mesh easy gear change. The picture of the Vauxhall and the description of the car leads us to think it is a Chevrolet under an English name. Maybe we are wrong. The horsepower is listed at 12 and 14. The price is 205 pounds. The pound is worth $4.94 so figure it out.

We thank Paul for the paper and any of our readers who would like to see it, drop into the office.

Little Shamrocks In Tie With Corwith For Conference Lead

SHAMROCKS DEFEAT WODEN TUESDAY EVE 25-21

Klemme Reserves Won Their Game To Tie For Conference Lead

The Klemme Shamrocks defeated the Woden high school five on the local floor Tuesday evening 25-21. After piling up a 21-9 lead in the first half the home boys faltered in their pace and were outplayed during the second period. Klemme scored 2 goals in the first two minutes of play in the 2nd half and during the rest of the game were held scoreless. At the start of the 4th quarter they enjoyed a 25-15 lead but Woden made athrilling drive and brought the count 25-21 with four minutes left to play. However, the Klemme boys tightened their deense and emerged at the head of a 25-21 score.

Stokesbary was the key man in the Woden game as he figured in almost every scoring play. The scoring was evenly divided. The Shamrocks showed good improvement and except for their last quarter hesitation, played heads-up basketball.

By virtue of their win over the Woden Seconds Tuesday eve the Shamrock Reserves are tied with Corwith for first place in the race for the cup to be awarded the Seven Eagles Conference Reserves. If the locals can come through their next two games with the Goodell and Corwith reserves, they stand an excellent chance of capturing the cup.

Tuesday night they took the measure of the Woden Seconds 15-3. Gast showed up good in the center post and proved a valuable player for the reserves. The rest of the squad came through with the usual brilliant performance.

GROUNDS IMPROVEMENT ON PROGRAM FOR 1935

Landscape Specialist From Iowa State College to Conduct Course

In order to assist the individual home owner in improving his surroundings, the Farm Bureau of Hancock County has arranged a program in Home Grounds Beautification, acording to announcement made today by County Agent S. J. Oberhauser.

The course will be conducted in 4 sections of the county the week of January 15 by Norman A. Morris, extension specialist in Landscape Architecture from Iowa State College. The immediate objective of this course in home grounds improvement is to create an interest in the proper landscape development of the home and farm and to show what can be done with a very limited or even no expense. The program has been arranged so that it will include material on planning, planting, selection of plants for Iowa, rock gardens, pools and maintenance of the grounds. Mr. Morris will outline at the meetings a method for preparing survey plans of home grounds and at another group of meetings later in the year, he will assist the individuals in preparing a landscape plan for their own grounds.

Meetings near Klemme will be held at Garner at the Farm Bureau office, Jan. 15 and at the City Hall Goodell, Jan. 18. Each meeting will be from 10:00 to 12:00 a. m. and from 1:00 to 3:30 p. m.

1935 CORN-HOG CONTRACT DECENTRALIZES AUTHORITY

More Responsibility Will Be Given County Associations

The 1935 corn-hog contract and administrative rulings provide for more responsibility for county control associations, free use of acres taken out of corn production and give advantages to the farmer who cooperates, in the opinion of R. K. Bliss, director of the Extension Service at Iowa State College.

Representatives of the Extension Service and the state corn-hog committee attended a regional meeting in Kansas City last week, where details of the new contract and rulings were discussed with AAA representatives.

The 1935 contract places no restriction on livestock other than hogs nor on grain other than corn. If the hog base—average number of pigs produced for market in 1932-33—is 15 hogs or less the farmer may elect to not reduce production, in which case no hog payment will be made. He may reduce corn acreage however, and receive payment for land retired.

Provision is made for increasing the base for corn or hogs or both, under certain conditions, but no benefit will be made on a commodity for which the base is increased. When a producer can convince the county committee that his hog or corn base is less than normal for the number of acres he operates and that the low base is the result of unusual conditions, the committee is authorized to increase the base. The size of the base will be determined by the average number of hogs raised on the size of farm in question and the ratio of acres of corn harvested to total crop acres in the township.

A producer this year may buy as many feeder pigs as he wishes from other contract signers. The number bought from non-contract signers cannot exceed the feeder pig base or the average number purchased in 1932 and 1933.

Unrestricted use of the acres retired from corn production will be of great value this year in rebuilding feed reserves.

The campaign to carry the contract will be conducted in a manner similar to that last winter. County corn-hog committees cooperating with the county agent will conduct the meetings at which the economic background, the contract and rulings will be explained. County workers will be assisted by representatives of the Extension Service and the state corn-hog committee.

CORN-HOG SIGN-UP SIMPLE FOR MAN ON SAME FARM

Signing a corn-hog contract for 1935 will be a simpler procedure than last year especially for farmers who operate the same farm and have the same corn and hog base as they used in the 1934 contract, according to S. J. Oberhauser, county agen and local representative of the United States Department of Agriculture.

According to information received from R. K. Bliss, director of the Extension Service at Iowa State College, the AAA will furnish to the county corn-hog association, production figures, corn acreage, yield and other 1932-33 data from the 1934 contract. This will be used where possible in making out the 1935 corn-hog contracts. Such a procedure will greatly speed the sign-up work this year.

Applicants for 1935 corn-hog contracts fall into three groups, as follows:

Group I. This group includes all farmers who have their corn and hog base established and who will farm in 1935 a tract of land exactly the same as the one covered by one or more 1934 contracts. It is not necessary that the producer continue on the same farm providing the new one was under contract in 1934 and the corn base established and providing that the producer brings with him his hog base.

Group II.. This group includes all plicants who must establish a hog hog base or are not eligible for one but who, for some reason, must establish a corn base for land which they will operate in 1935.

Group III. This group includes applicants who muts establish a hog base, or their part of the hog base in the case of farms rented on stock share. Farmers in this group may or may not have to establish a corn base for the land they will operate in 1935.

If the producer is farming the same number of acres as in 1934 but has changed the make-up of the tract—for example, by dropping some land or renting additional land it will be necessary to establish a new corn base if the whole farm is to be under one contract.

All applicants for a 1935 contract are required to fill out application blanks. The contract of 1934 has been divided into two parts thus shortening the actual contract. The application for a corn-hog contract also provides a place for a statement of division of the corn-hog payments between landlord and tenant. Farmers who have their corn hog bases for 1935 already established in the 1934 contract and who will farm exactly the same land in 1935 will not need to fill out the tables in the work sheet this winter.

CANNED MEAT VALUE LIKELY TO INCREASE BY SUMMER

Meat canned this winter will increase in value 10 times or more by next spring or summer if the price trend continues as present conditions indicate, according to Miss Chollett, home demonstration agent.

Miss Chollett is urging farm families to can meat this winter for two reasons: First, more feed will be available to better carry the other livestock through the winter; and second, canning will provide a palatable supply of beef for next spring and summer when meat prices probably will be higher than now.

The average 700 or 800 pound cow will yield about 150 to 200 pounds of canned, boneless meat, according to information received from C. W. McDonald, meat specialist in the extension service at Iowa State College.

Many farmers have had the experience this fall of selling cows for amounts that netted them $3 or $4 after trucking or other shipping charges were paid. If one of those cows were canned the cost of the boneless meat would be 1½ or 2 cents a pound. The retail replacement price is at least 15 cents per pound and by next summer may be considerably higher.

Families that can beef this winter may assure themselves a nutritious meat supply at low cost, said Miss Chollett. Canned beef may be used in various ways. Steaks, roasts chops and ground beef may be canned and used as such. Canned stew meat may be used in a large variety of recipes.

Families in small towns may save money on their grocery bill next spring and summer by buying a beef or a quarter of beef this winter and canning it. If they wish they may employ the farmer to do the cannin, for them and still save considerable money. While they are reducing their own living expenses they will be helping the farmer considerably by reducing the cattle surpus.

EDITORIAL

We have mentioned before that there are other important things in athletics besides winning every game. However, we are sometimes inclined to forget this. If we do our best, follow the suggestions given by our coach, and really try to play the game the best we know how. we have got something from it even though the score may not look so good. Perhaps these words express this thought better than we can:

"For when the One Great Scorer comes
To write against your name,
He writes not that you won or lost,
But how you played the game."

INQUIRING REPORTER
By C. L. K.

Would You Like To See "The Squealer" Continue Next Semester

I would like to see the "Squealer" continue next semester because it gives the parents some idea of what the pupils are doing at school. It also gives the pupils a chance to distribute some of the school gossip. I think the "Squealer" is a very good idea and should be continued next semester.—Harold L. Kothenbeutel.

The "Squealer" should continue. It gives valuable experience to the staff to work out the ideas learned from studies. And it is interesting! Not only students, but outsiders enjoy it. It lets people know we're alive, puts pep into school activities, and gives us more things for which to "stand up and cheer" in K. H. S. —Jeanne Thada.

I would like to see the "Squealer" continue next semester because it is lots of fun writing for it and reading it. Next semester there will be many more interesting things like the operetta, senior class play, skip-day, etc. Of course, if any of the other classes can "get by" with having skip day—so much the better for them (?)—and for a bigger paper.—Nora Wellemeyer.

I would like to see the "Squealer" continue because it gives us a distinction that many schools don't have. It is just a new way the happenings and gossip of the school to the rest of the community. You know the folks like to see some of the work their children do and the "Squealer" gives them an excellent opportunity because of the pupils in high school are asked to contribute to the paper. They say they hate to, but they really like it. Melvin Schlei.

SHAMROCK BLARNEY

The typing students have been typing business letters the past few weeks.

This week many visitors came up to see how much we knew and look us over. The group included Novella Bredbenner, Emma Sampson, Bud Sampson and Max Barz, former K. H. S. students; and Alice Cline, of Belmond and Gladys Zabilka of Fort Dodge. Floyd Klotzbach, Harold Jost, LaVern Drake and LaVohn Larsen also came up the 21st to hear our program and visit school. Visitors are always welcome. Come up when you can.

December 21st was a great day for students of K. H. S. It meant the last day of school in the year 1934! Were we sorry? Yes, I guess not! As a little celebration we staged a program by some "great" actors and actresses from our midst and topped it off with a grab bag (none were a bit grabby). When the much gazed upon timepeice finally reached the hour of four, the teachers gave us candy bars and apples, and we felt that deep down in their hearts they were glad to get rid of us for a while. After a week and a half of freedom we have again slipped back into our daily routine of reading, writing, whispering, etc. Some of us have made New Year's Resolutions and resolve to keep them. The members of the staff resolve to try to make the Squealer more interesting, to which I am sure no one objects. Semester tests are just around the corner also and storerooms of knowledge within have to be ransacked and gone over and here's hoping we all make the "grade."

SUGGESTS FEEDING PROTEIN, MINERAL WITH ROUGHAGES

Attention to the economy of feeding a high protein supplement and a mineral mixture with roughages being fed this winter is called by County Agent Oberhauser.

Because corn fodder, straw, cane fodder and similar roughages lack in both protein and mineral matter found in good legume hays normally fed, many farmers are finding that their livestock are not doing well and are using more of the feeds than they would usually.

Fodder and other roughages will go much further and the cattle will do much better at a lower cost if a high protein supplement and a mineral mixture is added to the ration.

Good sources of protein at the present time are tankage and soybean oilmeal. From ¾ to 1 pound of these protein concentrates is needed to furnish the same amount of digestible crude protein as 3 pounds of good alfalfa hay; hence this amount should be fed when all of the hay is substituted with a protein concentrate.

Following is a desirable mineral mixture when legume hay is absent from the ration suggested by the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station: High calcium, raw, ground limestone 50 pounds; special bone meal 48 pounds; iron oxide 2 pounds with ½ ounce of potassium idoine per 100 pounds. If hand-fed, it should be at the rate of ½ to 1 ounce per animal per day.

An even simpler mixture that is satisfactory is made up of 2 parts finely ground limestone, 2 parts bonemeal and 1 part salt.

County Engineer Tells Of Work Done Past Year

ROAD NOTES
By C. F. Merten, County Engineer

The annual report of the County Engineer which has just been completed and filed with the State Highway Commission contains the following facts.

The total amount of money spent on roads and bridges during 1934 from funds under the jurisdiction of the Hancock County Board of Supervisors was $137,571.55. This does not include money spent by the State Highway Commission on primary roads or CWA money spent on highways.

The main items of expense were the following. Grading 70 miles of local roads cost $36,403.54 or an average of $520.05 per mile. This includes all contract costs, dynamite, labor and culvert pipe, the latter item accounting for nearly one-fourth of the total.

Concrete bridges, culverts and extensions cost $3172.00 including the extension of the slab bridge on the county trunk road between highway No. 15 and Crystal Lake which cost $2085.00. Some critics contend that this bridge should have been built wider in the first place, but when we reflect that the original bridge was built about 1912 when automobiles were rarely seen and travel was slow, we can understand why the bridge was built as it was. So far as I know none of the present county officials were in office at that time.

Graveling 57 miles of local roads cost $15,944.41, and average of $279.-78 per mile. This includes all costs of graveling the roads except the purchase of gravel pits and some of the labor which was paid for from CWA funds.

The cost of building six bridges of treated lumber and piling was $4804.75. Due in part of the NRA code our bridge lumber was 50 per cent higher than it has been in recent years, which, of course, added materially to the cost of these structures. The only untreated lumber used on these bridges was that used for the floor and handrails.

We spent $4828.98 of our construction money for gravel pits and gravel purchased by the yard. Other items were right of way $458 and drainage $430.85.

The cost of maintaining trunk roads was $16,157.21 and for maintaining local roads $51,645.00. Maintenance includes dragging, resurfacing with gravel, snow removal, the purchase of new equipment, bridge repairs, and other incidental work which is necessary to keep up the roads of the county.

The total cost of engineering for this work was $3726.75 or less than 3 percent of the amount spent. Hancock county labor will be used where practically all of this work and many needy families secured part of their support from this channel. The funds available for 1935 are somewhat less than was spent in 1934 so that we cannot employ quite as many men on road work but Hancock County labr will be used wherever possible.

GOODELL WINS DOUBLE BILL FROM KLEMME TEAMS

The Goodell high school basketball squad won a double bill from the Klemme High School first and second teams Friday night on the Goodell floor.

In the first team game Goodell started out strong, but the Klemme boys settled down and led 9 to 7 at the end of the first period; Goodell stepped out in the second quarter and registered a lead of 19 to 12. Scoring was even in the third quarter which ended with Goodlel leading 25-18. Goodell went on another scoring spree during the fourth period to win 36 to 22.

Ahrenkeil, Goodell forward was the standout of the game. He is a smooth easy player, perhaps one of the best forwards in the Seven Eagles Conference. Chuck Skinner turned in a good performance at the guard position for Goodell. Honors were evenly distributed among the Klemme players, who played a good game until the last quarter.

ONLY $35,134 GOLD IS NOW KNOWN TO BE HOARDED

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The justice department said today that only $35,134 worth of gold is now known to be in hoarding.

In the spring of 1933 when President Roosevelt decreed it an offense to be a hoarder, the estimate was that $35,000,000 worth was concealed in mattresses, tree stumps and other caches.

COLLEGE EDUCATION

President Arthur T. Hadley of Yale has made a valuable contribution to the current discussion concerningthe advisability of trying to make "college men" out of unsuitable material.

It would naturally be supposed that the head of a great university would stress the importance of a college education regardless, but it is an encouraging sign that leading educators are coming to realize that for the vast majority of young people the four years required by a college course is largely a waste of time, money and effort. We quote Dr. Hadley in part:

"People engaged in public instruction are inclined to go too far in thinking that everyone should be encouraged to purpose his schooling to the furthest possible degree. They lament what seems to them the highly inadequate proportion of elementary school children who go to the high schools and of high school pupils who proceed to college and they glory in any increase of these proportions. They seem to forget that the classroom is not the only means of education; that a youth may get more intellectual and moral training from practical work that he likes, than from formal lessons that he loathes."

Now, this does not mean to depreciate in the least the value of higher education to those who by intellect, teperament and inclination are capable of acquiring it and putting it to practical use. It simply means that unless a young person has the native ability to work with his brains, he had better be taught to work with his hands.

SUPERSTITIOUS? CONSIDER THIS MAN'S CASE

HUMBOLDT, IA.—If you're superstitious, consider how Raymond Henson might feel.

Hanson, whose birthday last year came on Friday, the thirteenth, has 13 letters in his name. So do his wife his grandfather, his son and daughter.

He's been a mail carrier 13 years and since he's been married, 14 years, he's moved 13 times. His son is 13. When he cut two birthday cakes at his last birthday party, he cut both cakes nto 13 pieces without realizing it.

Counting up the other day, he discovered that his recently born daughter makes the thirteenth grandchild of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. R Hanson.

TOWNSHIP CORN-HOG WORKERS AT TRAINING SCHOOL

Members of township corn-hog committees met in Garner, Tuesday, with the Hancock County allotment committee to discuss the 1935 corn-hog contract and administrative rulings. About 45 men attended.

Earl N. Schultz, from the Extension Service of Iowa State College, explained the new program. Plans for conducting the sign-up campaign in this county were discussed.

The 1934 committees will conduct the educational campaign and sign up the applicants for the 1935 contract. Definite days for signing application blanks in each school district will be designated later.

After practically all farmers who wish to cooperate in the 1935 program have signed applications they will meet to reorganize the corn-hog control association for 1935 and elect officers and township directors These committees will then take over the supervision of the new program, completing the actual signing of the contracts, filling out related forms, checking production figures and other duties.

Dates and places of meetings to be held in the various townships of the county where the new contract will be explained will be announced later, according to S. J. Oberhauser, county agent.

Customers May Use Unlimited Electricity At No Increase In Cost

Manager Megrew today announced a trial plan available to all customers of the Central States Electric Company for the unlimited use of electricity between January 18th and February 18th (thirty full days) with the guarantee that the cost will not exceed the amount of the customers February first billing.

This plan is in keeping with the policy of the Company to make available to its customers the maximum advantages of electric service and acquaint its customers with the opportunities afforded by the increased use of electric service.

Adequately lighted store windows with the lights burning all night would greatly improve the appearance of the business section of our town and the merchants can well afford to take advantage of this offer.

MAKES KNIVES AND MONEY OUT OF AUTO PARTS

SHENANDOAH, IA.—The blacksmith business being what it is and discarded model-T Ford magnetos being what they are, Blacksmith G. A. Kurtz of Shenandoah is making knives—and money.

In fact he's made 1,500 knives out of discarded magnetos in his spare moments. "I've made lots of knives before," he says, "but I never tried using magneto steel until this fall. They must be good knives for I've only had one complaint and that was that the knife was too hard. Which is hardly a fault."

EDITORIAL

A friend is someone who knows all about you and loves you just the same. Then does it not seem that true friendship is one of the most valuable possessions in the world? To have someone who would stick to you through thick and thin, encourage you when the whole world seems against you; someone to rejoice in your joy; sympathize in your sorrow; and back you in all ventures would indeed be a friend worth while having.

High School is an ideal place for such friendships to be created and I sincerely hope that all of us can find one true friend who will make like just a little more pleasant than it was before when that true friend is found. —B. L.

The perfect husband has been found at last. He is an Englishman who cooks breakfast, scrubs the floor, does the washing and most of the other housework, besides holding a steady job, giving his wife all his wages, and never leaving her alone at night. This all came to light when she sued for divorce.

What Is Your Favorite Radio Program and Why?

So-o-o-o the program is going to be different tonight. I just love that silly Ed Wynn. He just loves to tell about his pets and aunt and uncle; his operas are wonders. So long as his uncle drives his car like he does, I'll stick to my horse. The only reason I listen to this program is to hear Eddie Duchin and his orchestra.—Melvin Schlei.

My favorite radio program is Jack Benny's because I like to hear the way Jack says "Play, Don, Play" and Mary's poetry—why it's just like Longfellow's "Children's Hour." Others I like to hear are Joe Penner and Ed Wynn, the fire chief.—Elmer Jensen.

Ha Che Do! Ha Che Do! Pleased to Meet Cha! Perhaps many of you can guess my favorite already, and no doubt you're right. I pick the Baker's Broadcast, or as it is better known, Joe Penner. The reason I like to listen to the Penner's eldest son, Joe, is because he is so dumb and thinks he's pretty smart. He created many of our present favorite slang expressions and brought up some old ones. The best one I got from him is Whoo-ooo.—Lyndon Kilgore.

Gracie Allen seems to demand much of my attention when I listen to the radio. I can't say why she should amuse me more than anything else unless it is the fact that she is always popping up with some dumb answer that makes me laugh becaues of its dumbness. Of course, I don't think I would like to listen continually from one day to another but taken in "small quantities" she is amusing.—Ruth Wellemeyer.

My favorite radio program is the type which contains music. By that I mean singing accompanied by a very large orchestra. Who do you suppose I am referring to in particular? Well, it's none other than the songstress who always says "Hello everybody. This is Kate Smith." I have another type which I think is very interesting. This pertains to one with much humor and orchestra and singing combined. My favorite comedian was Eddie Cantor, but since he is not on the air any more I listen to Ed Wynn.—LaVonne Sherwood.

My favorite radio program is the Sinclair Minstrels because of their good jokes and music. The person in the Minstrels I like to hear sing is Joe Bassal, a bass singer. The song I like that he sings is "Deep River." Others I like to hear are Amos and Andy, and The Air Adventures of Jimmy Allen. — Evert Barz.

Famous Applan Way Was Over Three Feet Thick

The modern road builders must go far to equal the work of the men who supervised the Applan Way, the famed roadway of ancient Rome, which has lasted through the centuries. The cost of construction on the scale of the ancient Romans, however, would be prohibitive.

The great difference between Roman construction and modern lies in the intended purpose of the road top. The Romans believed that the road they built would have to bear the burdens. Modern science merely dresses the natural soil with a surface, the soil itself carrying the burden.

The Applan Way, which endures after 20 centuries, was 16 feet wide with 2-foot curbs 18 inches high on both sides, beyond which were 8-foot side roads. It was of solid stone and concrete masonry 3 to 4½ feet thick, depending upon the soil on which it was laid. It was very straight, with steep grades and the curves widened as on modern roads.

In building the Applan Way a bed of sand and gravel sometimes covered with a thin coat of lime mortar was used as a foundation for the four layers of masonry. The first masonry layer, from 10 inches to 2 feet thick was composed of stones that would fit in a man's hand, held together with lime mortar or clay. The second layer of smaller stones mixed with lime mortar, was 9 inches thick. The third layer was of concrete made of small stones, sand and hot lime mortar 1½ feet thick in the center and a foot thick on the sides, to give a crown to the road.

Ancient Greeks Athletes; Training Was Worth While

The ancient Greeks started physical training and made it a "required subject" in their schools.

That is why, says the New York World-Telegram, without benefit of vitamins, they were a strong and handsome people, virtually every youth was an expert javelin hurler and every maiden a worshiper of Diana.

This, in effect, was the story told by 200 stars of physical education classes.

Growth of physical education was traced from the time of the ancient Greeks, through the medieval period down to the gay nineties, and up to when a hill billy dance was considered excellent exercise.

The second period (medieval times) demonstrating the Slovenian influence was illustrated by a young woman in native costume dancing to accompaniment of an accordion.

The gay nineties were typified by a young man wearing very tight trousers and a girl in voluminous skirts riding a bicycle built for two.

Pony ballets, hill billy dancers, tap dancers and expert trapeze performers represented the more modern class

Famous Washington Elm

It isn't known just now how old the Washington elm was, but stories of the tree state that it was full grown, though still a rather young tree when on July 3, 1775, Washington stood beneath its shade and took command of the American army. The tree fell to the ground on October 26, 1923, while tree surgeons were engaged in the necessary operations of restoring it. It was replaced the same year by a scion from the top of the original. This failed to grow, and a second was set, but this also failed. A scion has grown, however, in Annapolis, Md. The dimension of the Washington elm were as follows: Circumference at breast high 18 feet; height, 95 feet; spread of branches, 90 feet.

The Drago Doctrine

When in the winter of 1902-03 Germany, Britain and Italy blockaded the ports of Venezuela in an attempt to make the latter country settle its debts, Dr. L. F. Drago, a noted jurist of Argentina, maintained that force cannot be used by one power to collect money owing to its citizens by another power. Prominence was given to the contention by the fact that it was officially upheld by Argentina and favored by other South American republics. The principle embodied has become generally known as the Drago doctrine.

Turning the Tables

In the days of imperial Rome there was a craze among men—"table mania," Pliny called it, for the collection of rare tables made of Mauritani wood and inlaid with ivory. Competition among the wealthy made the tables costly and, so the story goes when husbands accused their ladies of extravagance the ladies retorted with "What about your tables?" Which is supposed to have originated the phrase "turning the tables on them."

Drinking Water on Vessels

Many of the large ocean steamers have equipment for producing drinking water from sea water. The fundamental elements in the apparatus are described as a steam generator or evaporator in which the sea water is vaporized by means of superheated steam obtained from a special boiler or the engine boiler; a condenser combined with an aerator and a refrigerator with which in many cases a filter is combined.

Where Pearls Are Found

Oysters are invariably associated with pearls, but it is rarely that such highly prized gems are found in the common species. The pearl oysters, so much sought after, occur only in warm and tropical seas, especially around Ceylon.

Ancients' Calendar Plan Complicated Proposition

Telling the seasons in olden days was a complicated business. We tick off the days and months with a pencil, but the ancients calculated by the moon, notes a writer in the Montreal Herald. It is said that Noah used the early Egyptian calendar of the five-month year, thirty days to the month, and each month three weeks of ten days. Sticks, tied in bundles, was the invariable way of telling the day and season with the greater part of the ancient world, and today some American Indians keep five bundles of thirty sticks, pulling out one stick for each day. The last bundle is repeated in each half-year to level things up, and the middle bundle is split in two to judge the approach of mid-summer or mid-winter.

In the South Sea islands the "moon stick" is used to determine the seasons. A notch is cut in the stick after each passing moon. Borneo uses a calendar consisting of various lengths of tattooed poles.

The Dyaks have a custom whereby they tell the season by the length of the sun's shadow. Calendar-makers tour the country in the season of sowing and plant these colored poles on the farms. By a system of queer calculation they adjust these poles to a certain length marked on the ground. Invariably this shadow-marking proves accurate, and in due time the calendar-maker again tours the farms to receive his payment of part of the crop.

Three Eaglet Teams In Tie For Conference Cup

SHAMROCKS DOWNED CORWITH TWICE FRIDAY NIGHT

Reserves Are Again Tied For Conference Lead

Displaying a near championship form the Klemme High School Shamrocks downed the Corwith high school powerhouse on the local floor Friday night 33 to 18. The Shamrocks put forth a well-nigh perfect passing attack which the Corwith defense, despite several shifts, seemed unable to solve. On the other hand the Klemme defense was drawn so tight that the Corwith lads were practically forced to confine themselves to long shots from near the center of the floor.

Kaduce, sophomore center, who ran up 14 points in the game, showed splendid improvement in his under the basket play, as well as shutting his opponent to a lone point. Other members of the team also starred in brilliant performances. Corwith led the first quarter 6 to 5, the Klemme five started clicking, ending the half in the lead 17 to 9. They continued their drive during the third period 25 to 12 and ended the game 33 to 18.

Stung by their defeat at the hands of the Goodell five a week ago, Klemme's Little Shamrocks went after the Corwith reserves with a vengeance, determined to stay in the race for the Seven Eaglets championship. After the smoke of battle had cleared away, the Little Shamrocks had thrown the conference standings into three-way tie for first place; Klemme, Corwith and Goodell all having won 7 and lost 2.

Scoring Friday night was started by C. Sorenson, of Corwith, who unintentionally donated a basket to the Klemme cause. Each period found the Little Shamrocks piling up more of a lead: 4-2; 7-2; 11-4; and 14-6.

New Klemme Well Is Now Nearly Completed

FARM DOLLAR GAINS; NOT YET ON PAR WITH INDUSTRY

Iowa corn-hog producers have demonstrated their ability to work tgether in a giant cooperative enterprise to increase the profit from farm income, R. K. Bliss, director of the Extension Service at Iowa State College, declared before a meeting of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation at its annual convention in Des Moines last week.

Director Bliss outlined briefly the history of the past year's program and referred to various improvements that have been made in the 1935 production control agreement. He cited the free use of land retired from corn as highly important in rebuilding reserves of forage crops. He also mentioned the larger corn acreage and numbers of hogs contract signers may produce this year.

Referring to criticism that comes from various sources that production control has increased the cost of living, Director Bliss pointed out that the drought has curtailed supplies far more than the AAA program. The AAA programs were aimed at an orderly adjustment of surpluses which had accumulated over past years. The drought coming on top of these programs went further in one year than the adjustment programs would have gone in two years.

Agriculture has not reduced production as much as industry. The steel industry, for example, reduced production about one-half in 1932 and 1933 and about 30 percent in 1934. At the same time it maintained the price of its products and threw many people out of work.

Certainly it is no greater crime to reduce the production of food in order to keep the farmers out of the poorhouse at a time when our export markets are destroyed, than it is to throw people out of work and put them in the bread line thru the closing of factories.

For years agriculture has produced a surplus to be sold at prices which did not give a fair return. Despite adjustment of production the farmer's dollar is not yet on a par with that of industry.

KLEMME'S NEW DEEP WELL HAS PLENTY OF FINE WATER

The Thorpe Well Co. of Des Moines started another test of Klemme's deep well Tuesday when they set heavier equipment in motion. Previous tests were made with a small gasoline motor which did not have sufficient power to determine the amount of water available. However at that time a 4 inch pipe could be kept filled and the pumping rate was 170 gallons per minute. By hooking up a heavier engine the test Tuesday far exceeded the previous test and a six inch pipe was kept filled and the quantity of water pumped was approximately 320 gallons per minute.

There is no question but that the well would supply over 500 gallons per minute if that much were needed.

The tests were being conducted in order to determine the kind of pumping equipment that is needed. As the situation now stands much of the old equipment can profitably be used. A larger motor will be needed as well as a larger turbine and an extension of the pipes.

When all tests have been completed the Times will publish complete data on the well, which is one of the deepest in North Iowa.

EDITORIAL

It has become a national game in America, especially at the beginning of a New Year, to pick out outstanding events, personalities, plays, movies, books, news-stories, etc. of the past year. Our Inquiring Reporter this week played that game on a small scale. A current magazine runs a column called, "They Stand Out From The Crowd."

Although there are many peeople who stand out from the crowd because of some great and admirable thing they have done, others stand out for some notrious thing they have done.

As people stand out in K. H. S.—some for things they have done that are good, and others for things that are not so good.

In K. H. S. one might stand out from the crowd for being the most ambitious or the laziest; most or least cooperative; best or poorest sport; most or least courteous; most or least friendly; most or least studious.

Use your own judgment and see which class you would rather be in. —M. B.

INQUIRING REPORTER
By C. L. K.

What Prominent Present Day American Do You Most Admire?

I consider Mrs. Roosevelt the most prominent American today. Never before has any president's wife done so much for her country. She has contributed to poor people and children. She gives to those who are sick so they can have medical care and again regain their health. She is interested in everything, sports, societies and the welfare of our country.—Esther Trampel.

My favorite American is Admiral Richard Byrd. He has proved to the world much bravery and courage, and only a person with a strong character, such as he has, could do the wonderful things that he has done.—Dolorys Cook.

Admiral Byrd is the American I am most interested in. I admire his bravery and courage in exploring Little America. He takes many chances in getting the history of Little America for the world. I listen to his broadcasts over the radio. Lindbergh is another I admire. He has given to the building up of Air Mail Service. He also has done much flying himself. E. C. Segar, the man always smoking the big cigar is another famous man. He is the father or author of Popeye, the Sailor Man. He draws Popeye for many large papers and he also makes movies of Popeye.—Buster Jorgenson.

What prominent present day American do I most admire? Wel. I would say that president, Franklin D. Roosevelt is the most admirable American of the present day. In my opinion, he is a worthy patriotic person. I sincerely think he is the best liked of the American people, the most talked and heard about. I place him as the most prominent American at the present day and for years to follow.—Franklin Kluckhohn.

The American I most admire is an Iowan, Ruth Suckow. She is classified as among the best authors since the publishing of her last book "The Folks." This book is interesting because it has Belmond as its setting. Her books receive much credit because they deal with people that live just a common life. I think Ruth Suckow should receive much honor for the publishing of her books, but not because she is my distant cousin.—Velda Schaeffer

Grades 7 and 8

The following people in the seventh and eighth grades have been neither absent nor tardy for the first semester: Dwaine Johnson, Doris Johnson and Chester Ward.

The seventh grade are taking history the second semester to replace Hygiene.

The eighth grade will begin work on new Iowa History work books next week.

Marvin Lemke is absent because of illness.

The seventh grade is proud of their spelling record for this week. Nine people had 100 averages and the class average was 99 percent.

THE TATTLER

There was much commotion in the assembly this morning, not due altogether, to the fact that semester tests were over, but due in a greater degree to the appearance of a new fad in high school.

It seems that this school has never gone this modern before, but of course, there is always a first time.

This whim, as we may call it, broke up the staff meeting for a period of five minutes, so those, shall I say, unfortunates, who had not had the opportunity to gaze upon "what the modern young men are wearing" could do so, and it caused a volley of giggles, snickers, and hee-haws to gush from the assembly door when the "new" was seen walking down the aisle.

This new vogue has caused many an envious boy a heartache and many a girl a laugh and (?).

Two boys with permanents is bad. I wonder in a week how many more will be added to this list?

Seeing that it is just Seniors with these "perms" so far—it is hard to tell whether they did it to get their names in the paper or to make their Senior class pictures more attractive. Time will tell!—R. W.

SHAMROCK BLARNEY

The students are now settling down to the duties of a new semester. The new courses which can be taken this semester are Bookkeeping and Accounting, American Gov't. and Commercial Geography.

The new 1935 edition American Government book contains some major and minor changes and to present the government as it is in 1935 the author has incorporated in the text changes that promise to be permanent. This is a decided advantage over the old text. There has also been added a new chapter on "The Recovery Program and Its Advantages."

The workbook in Commercial Commercial Geography takes up in detail the study of the United States and Foreign Countries which also promises to be very interesting

Both Boy's and Girl's Glee clubs are working on the operetta which will probably be presented February 6th.

After much debating the senior class has finally decided to have their pictures taken in the near future. Two of the male members of the cast have made elaborate preparations. Their heads show the result of an encounter with the permanent waving machine.

SCHOOL STUDENTS BLESSED WITH NEW YEAR'S DAYS
An Essay

New Year's Day is the first day of the year. The observance of it is of very ancient origin. The Romans were accustomed to exchange greetings and presents. The Jews, Chinese, Egyptians and Mohammedans, while differing as to time of celebration, all celebrate the first day of the year by their respective calendars. In Persia the year is supposed to begin March 21. In the Christian era Christmas Day, Easter, and the first of March, have in turn, been celebrated and it was not until late in the 16th Century that the first of January was universally accepted.

We often feel as if we high school students observe three New Year's Days a year: one, January first; another, in the fall when school starts; and the third at the beginning of the second semester. All of them are good days on which to make resolutions.—Harriet Gibbs.

The third and fourth grades made some new health booklets this week. They tried new designs for the cover of the booklet.

Friday afternoon the third and fourth grades played singing games in the gym with Miss Thorne's room

RETURN OF CLAY INDUSTRY SEEN BY PROF. COX

Ames, Ia.—A revival of the clay industry which flourished in the Des Moines river valley from 1830 to 1865 is foreseen by Prof. Paul E. Cox, head of the ceramic engineering department at Iowa State college here.

Professor Cox has reviewed results of experiments conducted to see if clay and limestone of the region are suitable for producing buff face brick, pottery, terra cotta and rock wool. The experiments were conducted for the state planning board.

Pottery made at Ames from Iowa clay is equal to pottery on the market now. The same clay will produce buff face brick. Experiments in producing rock wool, used in insulated buildings, now are being conducted.

Power for the proposed industries might be obtained from Des Moines. river dams. Contstruction of such a dam at Bonaparte, Ia., now is being considered by the state planning board.

THE SMALL STORES

Pessimists have long predicted the gradual extinction of the small stores and their absorption by the national chains. One observer of the trend toward the dominance of combinations of capital in the retail trade wrote:

"It is not pleasant to the small merchant to be dragged behind the counter as a salaried employee; a little spoke in a big wheel."

But it happens that this doleful prediction is not of recent origin. It was written and published in the Springfield Republican in 1895—40 years ago. At that time the big department stores were just getting under way. Since then we have seen added menaces to the small retailer in the form of mail order houses and chain stores. Yet thousands of small town stores have survived, many of them becoming big stores. Naturally those which have succeeded are the ones which have kept abreast of the times, adopting new methods and policies as occasion demanded to meet the keener competition presented by the larger enterprises. And a most important factor which has contributed to the success of retailers, large and small, has been intelligent, persistent and adequate advertising.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Building Panama Canal Originated With Spain

The thought of building a canal across the isthmus connecting North and South America originated with Spain in 1521, and some surveys were made at that time under the Spanish government, says the Indianapolis News. The serious business of building the canal, however, took shape in 1876 with the organization of a company in Paris which was to make the requisite surveys and investigations. Following an international scientific congress, in 1879, composed of 135 delegates from various nations, most of whom were French, which determined the site of the canal, a French company was formed which took up the work of construction on a large scale in 1883. Work on the canal was vigorously prosecuted until 1889, when the company became bankrupt under circumstances which produced charges of fraudulent transactions and of corruption upon a colossal scale. Suits were brought in the French courts against canal officials, including the president, contractors and others, who, it was charged, had benefited illegally in connection with the canal work. The property of the canal company was put in charge of a liquidator, and remained in his hands until 1894, when the new Panama canal company was organized and took over the assets of the old company. From 1894 until the property was acquired by the United States government, in May 1904, the new Panama canal company prosecuted the work of construction with a small fores located almost entirely in the great Culebra cut.

Refracting Telescopes Are Difficult to Make

Most people think of a telescope as a long tube with a lens in one end and an eyepiece in the other, says Literary Digest. In instruments of this kind, known as refracting telescopes, the light is gathered by a large lens and focused in an eyepiece. Very large astronomical telescopes make use of another principle, that of reflection, because of the difficulty of making successful large refracting telescopes. In reflecting telescopes the light from distant objects is collected by a huge concave mirror, called the speculum, and focused on a smaller mirror, which in turn transmits the light to an eyepiece. When used for taking photographs the eyepiece is replaced by a camera.

Since the light-gathering power of a telescope mirror is proportional to its area, the bigger the mirror the more useful it will be—within certain limits. Thus, a 100-inch mirror should theoretically be able to "see" four times as much as a 50-inch one. The 100-inch telescope at Mount Wilson sees about as far as light can travel in 800,000,000 years.

Ancient British Village

The village of Cuddington, Surrey, England, is more than 1,250 years old and history records the existence of the place in the year 675, with the passing of Athelstan and Edward the Confessor. The neighborhood was famous from the reign of Henry VIII to that of Charles II as a center of royal festivities. In the Sixteenth century Henry VIII fenced in some 1,600 acres of park and built Nonsuch palace, where for nearly two centuries the revels of the court was held. Later Queen Mary sold Nonsuch to the earl of Arundel. Afterwards it was possessed by Queen Elizabeth, and it was here that the ill-fated earl of Essex was arrested prior to his removal to the Tower of London. In 1670 King Charles gave the palace to Barbara Villiers, who dismantled the castle and sold the contents.

National Trees

According to the secretary of the British forestry commission, "there is no 'national tree' for Great Britain." But judging from the crests of the Royal English Forestry society and the Royal Scottish Forestry society, the oak tree has been adopted as an emblem by Great Britain, and the pine tree by Scotland. The Canadian legation at Washington states "no tree has been officially designated as a 'national tree.' However, the maple leaf is regarded as Canada's national emblem, and appears in the arms or ensigns armorial assigned to the Dominion by the royal proclamation of November 21, 1921. The particular variety of maple leaf is not therein described." . . . "However, the variety which appears in the arms is the Acer saccharinum, commonly known as the silver maple."

Our War With Mexico

The crisis which brought about the war with Mexico was precipitated by the annexation of Texas. Mexico had never recognized or accepted the independence of Texas. An argument arose over a boundary question between Mexico and Texas. President Polk accepted the Texan point of view and ordered General Taylor into the disputed zone. By the Americans this was regarded as an act of defense, but it was denounced by the Mexicans as an invasion of their country.

Ivory Nut Beetle

In the Panama Canal zone there is a small beetle which bores into the ivory nut, one of Panama's largest exports. These nuts are used to make buttons. This beetle is no larger than a grain of wheat, but it can penetrate the tough fibers of the ivory nut which is so hard as to turn the edge of a sharp knife.

English People Greatest Dog Lovers in World

It is generally accepted that the English are the greatest nation of dog lovers on earth.

One of the strongest proofs of this lies in the fact that in almost all of the paintings of rulers and great men of bygone times a dog is depicted somewhere.

In practically all the paintings of King Charles I a King Charles spaniel is found. Who has not heard of the devotion of a greyhound to King Richard II? Mary Queen of Scots is shown in a picture with a Skye terrier. This terrier was missing on the morning of Mary's execution, and when the blood-stained body was taken up, the animal was found crouching beneath her robes. He "could not be gotten forth but with force, and afterwards would not depart from the corpse, but came and laid between her head and shoulders." A lady took charge of him, but the poor thing refused all further connection with human beings and pined away.

Very similar was the action of the Pekingese which stood over the bodies of the czar of Russia and his family and defied the assassins until a bullet settled his defiance forever. A pug once saved the prince of Orange by giving warning of the approach of a raiding party. The prince always had a pug of some sort or other so long as he lived.—American Kennel Gazette.

Precious Stones, Posies That Have Some Meaning

January's stone is the garnet. The others are: February, amethyst; March, bloodstone; April, diamond; May, emerald; June, pearl; July, ruby; August sardonyx; September, sapphire; October, opal; November, topas; December, turquoise.

Poetry, tradition and popular usage has ascribed different meanings to flowers, though there is no authoritative list or uniform agreement. Here are the names of a few: Anemone—anticipation, frailty; apple blossom—admiration; buttercup—wealth; calla lily—magnificent beauty, pride; white camellia—innate worth; cardinal flower—distinction; cornflower—delicacy; cowslip—youthful beauty; daffodil—unrequited love; daisy—simplicity, innocence; dandelion—coquetry; forget-me-not—true love; foxglove—insincerity; geranium—gentility; golden rod—encouragement; heather—loneliness; heliotrope—devotion; white heather—good fortune; hollyhock—ambition; honeysuckle—friendship; hyacinth—sorrow; narcissus—vanity; orange blossom—marriage; rose—love; shamrock—loyalty, and the violet—modesty.

Rove Beetles

Rove beetles are very common about decaying animal matter, and are often found upon the ground under stones or other objects. They are mostly very small insects; a few species, however, measure half an inch, or more, in length. The body is long and slender, with short wing covers. The wings are fully developed, often longer than the abdomen. When not in use, the wings are folded beneath the short wing covers. The insect when it folds its wings very often finds it necessary to make use of the tip of the abdomen, or one of its legs, to assist in folding the wings beneath the wing covers. These beetles run very swiftly and have the curious habit of raising the tip of the abdomen in a threatening manner when disturbed. The larvae of these beetles resemble the adults in the form of their bodies, and are found in similar situations. About one thousand species of Rove Beetles have been described in North America.

Abyssinians Dance in Churches

In Abyssinia are strangely preserved many forgotten rites of the ancient Hebrews and the first Christians. After the Queen of Sheba's visit to King Solomon, it is said 12,000 Hebrews of the best families in Jerusalem settled in the land. The descendants of these people today form the aristocracy of Abyssinia and are Christian. On the other hand, another contingent of Hebrews came to Abyssinia after the destruction of the Temple at Jerusalem, and have remained faithful to the original Jewish religion. It is an interesting fact that the Abyssinians still dance in their churches, as the Israelites did before the Ark.

Genesis of a Stogie

When the Argonauts drove their large, white canvas-covered wagons across the desert, their drivers needed something to keep their minds off the dust and death around them. They carried long cigars, bought in Pittsburgh at the start of their trip, around the top of their boots. The wagons they drove were called Conestoga wagons, because they were made in Conestoga, N. Y. When the driver wished to be especially polite to a rider alongside him, he would reach down into his boot for a cigar. The smoke became known as a "Conestoga cigar"—and was finally shortened to "stoga"—hence, stogie.

Remarkable Descendants

From Jonathan Edwards, president of Princeton university who married Sarah Pierrepont in 1727 have descended—13 college presidents, 65 college professors, 60 physicians, 60 authors, 30 judges, 30 state governors, 100 lawyers, 100 clergymen, 265 college graduates, 3 congressmen, 2 United States senators and 1 United States Vice President.

Supposed "Impossibles" Not Always Impossible

That the commonplaces of today were the "impossibles" of yesterday is most graphically shown when bits of information like the following are brought to light:

The telephone was first thought of as a very marvelous laboratory experiment, nothing more. Chauncey Depew was asked to invest $5,000 in the invention, but an expert electrician of his day warned him against it.

In 1866, a decade before Bell, one Joshua Coppersmith was arrested in New York for attempting to extort funds from "ignorant and superstitious people by exhibiting a device which he claimed would convey the human voice any distance over metallic wires, so that it could be heard by the listener at the other end."

A Boston newspaper at the time (incidentally, Boston is where Bell later perfected his telephone), editorialized about the arrest thus: "Well-informed people know that it is impossible to transmit the human voice over wires as may be done with dots and dashes and signals of the Morse code and that, were it possible to do so, the thing would be of no practical value. The authorities who apprehended the criminal are to be congratulated, and it is hoped that his punishment will be prompt and fitting, that it may serve as an example to other conscienceless schemers who enrich themselves at the expense of their fellow-creatures."—Washington Post.

Field of Cloth of Gold Story of 15th Century

In June, 1520, two kings met in the fields near the small town of Andres in France. These two kings were Henry VIII of England, and Francis I of France. The meeting was held by special request of Francis, according to a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, who wished to gain the friendship of the English king to aid him in his ambitious projects for curbing the power of his great rival, Charles V of Germany.

In consideration of the fact that Henry had crossed the channal to grant the interview, the meeting was held on land that still belonged to the English crown. Many of the nobility, of both France and England, were present, and endeavored to outdo one another in the magnificence and gorgeous decoration of themselves, their banners and tents, and their retinues of followers. The whole ceremonial was under the direction of that inordinate lover of pomps and vanities, Cardinal Wolsey, and from the extravagance and display attendant upon it, its scene has been known to history as "the field of the cloth of gold."

Crater Mystery Settled

The Arizona meteor crater has been a subject of controversy among geologists, physicists and mining engineers. The crater, which is situated in the plains near Winslow, Ariz., is an elliptical pit about three-quarters of a mile long and some 600 feet deep. It is surrounded by a circular ridge or parapet that rises about 130 feet above the plateau. Modern methods have settled the matter beyond doubt. A survey was made of the electrical resistance of the underground formations, together with observations on the variations of the earth's magnetic force. From these studies predictions were made as to the location and depth of the meteoric material, depth to water and other structural effects. Two drill holes put down verified the predictions, encountering the meteoric mass at a depth of about 680 feet. Thus the controversy was settled.

West Point Requirements

It is not required that an applicant for admission to West Point be a high school graduate. But the entrance examination is such that unless he has had a first-class high school education or its equivalent, he will not be able to make an entering grade. The course of study is four years during which the cadets are under strict military discipline. Summers are spent in camp. Upon graduation cadets are commissioned second lieutenants in the United States army, and are assigned wherever they may be needed. Upon entrance to the academy a student binds himself to the government for eight years.

Bees as Thinkers

Having proved that bees are blind to red colors but are able to distinguish between different designs or markings, the American Museum of Natural History goes a step further and proves that they possess intelligence and use it. A little trapdoor was used in the entrance to their hive which would open out but not in. Incoming bees, watched until some fellow bee came out and the waiting one slipped in while the trap was raised. Some others discovered that by turning a somersault they could over-balance the trapdoor and thus roll inside.

Celluloid

Parkes and Still, two Birmingham chemists, invented celluloid in 1847. Its constituents are gun-cotton and camphor, the latter rendering it pliable. Except for its inflammability, not surprising considering its composition, celluloid is an almost perfect material. Imitation ivory and safety glass have long been its staple productions. The chemist has found that by combining celluloid and fish scales he is able to produce artificial mother-of-pearl of a texture calculated to deceive anyone but an expert.

SWEET CLOVER PIONEER DEAD

Maquoketa, Ia.—Frank Coverdale, 73, known throughout Iowa as the "original sweet clover man," died at his home here Friday morning after an illness which started with a stroke last May.

It was 30 years ago that Mr. Coverdale first attracted public attention with what at that time was a startling practice of cultivating sweet clover. His neighbors appealed to the authorities to restrain him from raising a "noxious weed" claiming he was supporting a nuisance and vitiating the land.

Later when it became evident that Mr. Coverdale's "nuisance" was actually a precocious scheme of crop rotation, Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace, Sr., made the statement: "Frank Coverdale is the original exponent of sweet clover, a 'weed' that goes about Iowa doing good."

Here's All The "Dope" On New Corn-Hog Contracts

SPECIAL RULES EXPLAINED IN 1935 CORN-HOG CONTRACT

Since the corn-hog contract itself is written to fit the farm of the average producer ,administrative rulings have been drawn up to explain certain portions of the contract and to allow the contract to be signed by producers whose conditions are different from those of the average producer. Inclusion in the contract of all these rules on special cases would make it an unweildy document.

The contract provides that the administrative rulings are a part of the agreement between the producer and the AAA. A circular containing administrative rulings No. 101 to No. 133 is now available and it is thought that the number of administrative rulings issued during the sign-up and later phases of the program will be few.

The term "producer" is defined as including persons owning and operating their own farms, tenants operating farms rented for cash or tenants operating farms rented for cash or tenants operating on crop or stock share leases. Landlord" is used in the contract referring to persons from whom a producer rents land in return for a share of the crops or hogs produced. If the landlord does not get a definite share of the corn or hog receipts of the farm, he is not eligible for a share of the benefit payments and should not sign the contract.

A "farming unit" includes all land which is to be operated by the producer in 1935 as a single unit with work stock, farm machinery and other labor substantially separate from that used on any other tract of land. This means that father and sons each farming his own land but using the same equipment and horses must include their land under one contract.

The administrative rulings provide that the county allotment committee shall not recommend for acceptance a contract signed by a person who is not a bonafide farm operator or a contract which will not tend to further the purposes of the agricultural adjustment act. If an applicant for a corn-hog contract did not in 1934 plant to corn at least 25 percent of the corn base or if he did not produce for market 25 percent of his hog base, he will not be considered a "bonafide farm operator" unless he presents evidence to the county committee showing that such failure to produce 25 percent of his base was not because he had retired or intended to retire from production.

The division of corn and hog benefit payments as between producer and landlord is covered by the administrative rulings. Unless the landlord receives a share of the corn crop or the hog crop as rent, all of the benefit payment goes to the producer. Where a division of benefit payments between the landlord and tenant is made, the landlord will share in the benefit payment on each commodity in the same proportion as his share of the crop under the lease. For example, if the landlord receives 40 percent of the corn crop as rent, he will receive 40 percent of the corn rental payments, the other 60 percent going to the tenant. The same principle applies to hog benefit payments.

The administrative rulings provide that the landlord shall not receive a larger share of the benefit payment this year than he would have received under the lease used in 1934 unless he shows the county allotment committee that the change in the contract was not for the purpose of depriving the tenant of his just share of the benefit payment.

The method of estimating the corn yield per acre on which the rental payments are made, is different from 1934. In estimating the corn yield per acre all land which has been in corn at least once during the years 1930 to 1934 inclusive shall be considered by the community committee. The total benefit payment per acre will be 35 cents per bushel multiplied by the average acre yield determined by the community committee. Last year the average yield was based only on the area designated as contracted acres.

Some corn bases the adjusted annual average acreage during 1932 and 1933 include acres on which corn was grown for silage. In such a case the producer will be required to fill his silo or silos to the same level as they were filled during the base period. If he does not do this, his corn base will be reduced by the number of acres on which silage corn was grown during the base period. If all the corn grown on the farm does not fill the silo to the required level, the producer will have fulfilled the requirement when he puts all such corn into the silo.

No corn rental payments will be made if the average number of acres planted to corn, exclusive of acres used for silage and cut green is less than 10 acres. If the hog base is 15 hogs or less, the producer —and landlord, if any—may elect to produce the full number specified in the hog base. In such case no hog benefit payments will be made and the number of hogs produced must not be greater than the hog base.

In computing the hog base of a new producer who started in 1933, the number of hogs produced for market from litters farrowed in 1933 need not be divided by two if the producer did at no time before Dec. 1, 1932 engage in farming operations or have any interest in hogs or growing corn and if he did not have an ownership interest in a farm prior to July 1, 1932 Litters owned by a minor child of the producer during 1932 or 1933 may be included in the producer's hog base. This provision is made to encourage the common practice of giving ownership and responsibility for sows, gilts or pigs to 4-H club members and vocational agriculture students.

The administrative rulings provide that in cases where the producer submits adequate proof to the county allotment committee that 1932-1933 corn acreage or hog production was lower than normal because of unusual circumstances, the committee may grant the producer an increase in his corn or hog base. In such case, however, no benefit payments will be made on any commodity for which the base is increased. These rules provide for special cases which must be taken up with the county allotment committee.

The administrative rulings contain no restrictions on crops grown other than corn and no restrictions on livestock other than hogs. Explanation of longer and more complicated rulings may be obtained by producers at their local township meetings.

Shamrocks Pile Up Victories In Cage Battles Of Past Week

KLEMME FIVES CHALK UP TWO MORE VICTORIES

Grade Team Lost To Hayfield Friday Night 8 to 3

Klemme High School's Shamrock basketball team journeyed to Hayfield Friday night and came home with the long end of a 36 to 31 score.

The first quarter was marked by a fouling spree by both teams with Hayfield making good on a few more gift shots to lead at the quarter 10 to 7. The Klemme boys then settled down and tied the score 15 to 15 at the half. Immediately after the second half began the Shamrocks started clicking and sank five field goals in rapid succession. During the rest of the quarter Hayfield scored five points and the period ended with Klemme leading 25 to 20. Both teams scored eleven ponts in the last period. With two minutes left to play and the Shamrocks leading 36 to 23, O. Taylor ran wild and sank three goals in less than half a minute to bring the count up 36 to 29. Klemme called time out and then held the Hayfiled team to one field goal; the game ending 36 to 31.

The Klemme team played a good game and kept up the spirit they displayed in downing Corwith the week before. Scoring honors were evenly divided.

SHAMROCKS GET REVENGE ON VENTURA FIVE

Little Shamrocks Won Again—As Usual

Klemme High School basketball teams won a double-header from the Ventura high school on the Ventura floor Tuesday night in a non-conference game 36 to 26 and 14-10.

The Shamrock regulars played a splendid game sinking the ball from all over the floor. They ran up a lead of 10 to 4 at the quarter and 19 to 7 at the half. At the end of the third period 30 to 12. They boosted the score up 36 to 17 before the reserves were sent in to play the final period. Ventura then ran the count 36 to 26.

Klotzbach held Coyier, the Ventura lad who sank 10 field goals in 17 attempts on the local floor, scoreless until the reserves were sent in. Kaduce played the pivot position in fine style and spent the evening feeding the ball to Brinkman, Stokesbary and Kilgore, who seemingly couldn't miss the basket.

Klemme Will Have Large Supply Of Pure Water

COMPLETE DATA IS GIVEN ON KLEMME'S DEEP WTLL

Driller Ben Bergeson Furnishes Times With Interesting Information

Klemme's deep well is already now for the installation of new pumping equipment which has been ordered by the Council and is on the way to Klemme. Ben Bergeson, the driller, is still in Klemme dismantling part of the equipment and getting ready to install the new equipment when it arrives.

Now that the well itself is entirely completed, we will furnish our readers with all the information available.

Drilling was first started on October 2nd by the Thorpe Well Co. of Des Moines, with Ben Bergeson in charge and assisted by A. J. Diemer another driller for the company. Fay Smock and Donald Stille, local men, were employed to help the drillers, who ran the drilling machinery both day and night.

The well was drilled to a depth of 1512 feet and drilling was finished on December 29th. The St. Peters sandstone was reached at a depth of 979 feet and continued to a depth of 1055 feet. A test showed a production of 25 gallons of water per minute. This sandstone usually produces a much larger amount of water. It was then thought wise to drill down to the Jordan sandstone and this layer was reached at a depth of 1383 feet and reached down to 1470 feet. The hole was continued on beyond this point, however, as a sort of catch basin in which settlings could accumulate without interfering with the water supply above. The final depth of the hole being 1512. The size of the hole was started at 12 inches and finished off at 8 inches.

Following is the data on the depth of the various layers encountered:

Feet	Formation	total depth
14	Lime	164
8	Shale	172
3	Lime	175
21	Shale	196
684	Lime	880
32	Shaly Lime	912
3	Shale	915
7	Lime	922
41	Shale	963
13	Lime	976
3	Shale	979
76	St. Peters Sandstone	1055
78	Lime	1133
5	Shaly Lime	1138
245	Lime	1383
87	Jordan Sandstone	1470
42	Lime	1512

There are two sections of casings in the well and the best grade of cast iron was used. The first section is from the surface to solid limestone and 251 feet and 6 inches were used in this section of the well to case out the shale. A thick layer of limestone, 684 feet through, did not require casing, so the next section was started 853 feet from the top and sunk to a depth of 980 feet and 6 inches. Eight inch pipe was used in these sections.

Tests Show Plenty Of Water

After the well was completed Mr. Bergeson began making tests to indicate the amount of water at various levels. The "static" head, or the top of the water column is at a depth of 182 feet, with a draw down of 68 feet.

Following is the result of the tests when pumping from several levels:

Pumping Head	Gals. Per Min.
240 feet	250 gallons
250 feet	210 gallons
237 feet	245 gallons
218 feet	115 gallons
232 feet	225 gallons
228 feet	200 gallons
234 feet	235 gallons
220 feet	120 gallons

Every indication points out that there is an unlimited amount of water and if ever needed here the above amount could easily be increased by pumping from a lower level. However, at the levels given above Klemme will have an adequate supply of pure water.

The Council have purchased a new Pomona pump as the old equipment was not powerful enough for the deep well. The new pumping equipment should arrive in a few days and then it will not be long before Klemme can have all the pure water they want.

VAGABONDS LOST GAME TO RUDD REVIEW ACES

The Klemme Vagabonds were defeated by the Rudd Review Aces on the local floor Monday night 35 to 30 in a hotly contested battle that was anyone's game until the final gun sounded. The Vagabonds led at the quarter 8 to 4 and the score was tied at the half 16 to 16. In the third quarter the Review Aces forged ahead 25 to 21 and were able to maintain this margin during the last period to win 35 to 30. The game was well played by both of the teams, which seemed to be nearly evenly matched.

You Bring The Skates!

A large section of the Northern Lumber Co. alleyway was covered with ice Tuesday morning, all because the water meter had frozen and burst allowing a large quantity of water to escape and flow into the alley way of the yard.

A few hours more of escaping water and freezing and Klemme would have had a very nice skating rink in the building.

DAME FASHION RULES THE WORLD

Many, many years ago our ancestors bedecked themselves in animal skins and liked it. Then along came Dame Fashion and gained control of the human mind and people found it harder to "keep up with the Joneses." The women were slaves to her majesty, and they strutted about in their bustles and hoops and eccentric coiffures like sophisticated peacocks. Pleased and delighted her royal majesty again waved her wand and lo—the men trooped before her in embroided breeches, silk hose, ruffled neckware, ten gallon sleeves and powdered hair. Yes, indeed, powdered hair and now men shake their heads and sigh when a girl stops to powder her nose.

Dame Fashion is getting old but her power has never been weakened. She clothes her models in fantastic garb and smiles at seeing her willing subjcts delight in following the examples.

As long as women try to outdo each other and as long as there are men in the world, Dame Fashion will rule and so I say, "Long live her majesty!"

What Season Of The Year Do You Like Best And Why?

I think I like spring the best. In the springtime I think it is very enjoyable to be outside because then is when lawns and pastures get green and the flowers bloom, and this, I think, makes spring my favorite season.—Gladys Griffen.

I think I like fall the best of the seasons. In fall the leaves are colored and then they are a lot prettier. The temperature is just right in fall because it is not to cold then and it is not too hot. In the fall school begins and I like school better in the beginning than at the end.—Avis Barz.

There is something about autumn that gives me a great big thrill. Who can guess? I am sure I can't. Most likely it is that great big harvest moon; sometimes, the ghosts and witches; maybe it's going in steak fries in a lonely valley; or it might, I suppose, even be just to watch the leaves fall slowly to the ground. Then along comes Jack Frost and with him brings the snow. Out jumps everyone on his sled and away we go out to the hill to slide. —Nora Wellemeyer.

It's rather hard to decide which season I like the best. I like them all, but best of all I like spring. All the flowers, trees, and plants get green and the birds return. Then, too, we can look forward to vacation —Novella Beier.

I enjoy the nice warm summer season the best. What could a person enjoy more than a good day of golf or tennis or a day of huddling the stove? Summer you can enjoy all the wonderful beauties Mother Nature has given us, including the birds, flowers, green meadows and th beautiful gardens. Usually traveling is done more in summer and I do love to travel and enjoy beautiful scenery.—Alida Schubert.

SHAMROCK BLARNEY

Room II—This class room has been through quite a bit the past two weeks. Its walls have echoed and re-echoed speeches and more speeches made by ambitious declamatory contestants and here's hoping they come out on top.

The victory last Friday night has given the basketball teams greater courage and so I say—More power to them!

Merle Schaefer has returned to his school duties from the ranks of the missing. Harold Abele, Violet Schaefer and Lucille Waddingham have mised this week but we hope they will be able to return soon.

Grades 1 and 2

Mrs. Carolus and Marion visited our room on Friday afternoon.

Eduard and LaVonne had perfect spelling records during the last six weeks period. Junior, Emily, Jatty and Duard missed only one word.

Duard brought treats to school last week as he was seven year old. We wrote a story about his party.

We had "Clean Teeth" charts in our room which we color each day.

We are studyiny about Eskimos now. We have colored a large picture on the black board.

ONE WEEK OF SCHOOL
—By a Senior Disciple of H. S. M.

MONDAY:—Came to school full of good resolutions but did lose them in the atmosphere of the class rooms and the drone of the teachers voices and did wonder what school would be like without Bonnie and Melvin & decided they were clever at times & did wonder why teachers worked so hard; did decide they needed more credit than received. In the evening did spend hours reading the Literary Digest. Wondered about the Townshend act; decided I would receive no benefits so lost interest, ate a doughnut and so to bed.

TUESDAY:—Did get up feeling somewhat refreshed after going to sleep on my physics book but did decide physics books were better read than slept upon, rubbed my aching side & did wish I'd studied now & did think that golden stars should be given the industrious. Looked up words for English & did marvel at the amount of learning hidden away. Retired from school with a headache but did go down town & did enjoy a red apple & did wonder at the amount of youngsters wanting to go home while in the same breath trying to find a way out again.

WEDNESDAY:—Spent the morning in meditation and did decide that the school is headed for the dogs, having noticed the great number of animals assembled in front of the door & did notice also the great number of children feeding them & read "Lad, a Dog" & did feel sorry for the beasts & did notice that the works of Scott were scarcely used, while those of Zane Grey were worn to shreds & did muse as to whether the students took enough interest in good reading & did wonder if "The Folks" would arrive soon. Did gaze about & did discover many, many of our young ladies have lips alarmingly alike & did make me wonder if K. H. S. is losing its individuality & also noticed the sudden flair for hair ribbons. Did spend an amount of time gazing at the portraits of ex-convicts. Did not think well of them, but did wonder how we showed each when suspended from a nail.

THURSDAY:—Was greeted by the janitor with a cheery good morning. Helped to start the morning off in a nice way and did think about other schools and did decide we were up and coming, but did think we needed more educational magazines & newer books & the pretty plants which left us so suddenly, back again. Did think how well it would be to learn a definite something each day & did read the Pathfinder for a start and did learn the high cost of automobiles is due to the speed craze and demands of the people & did wonder how it would be to take Mother for a speedy ride and did dismiss the thought & go to bed.

FRIDAY:—Spent the morning writing & do wish my neighbor back of me would become more speedy & the one sitting in front of me not so wiggly. Did feel bad because of defeat of Klemme at Goodell, but did feel Klemme sportsmanship should be given on a number one rating & did wish the cheer leaders might be given more support & do feel the need of a lesson in drinking cup making & do think we should be more thoughtful for the blessings received & try to do our part more fully as we go through life & do wish I could practice what I preach.

Seining Crew Makes Large Hauls

The State seining crew working at Storm Lake made a record haul the early part of last week. They had such a large number of sheephead in this haul (it was estimated they had between 150,000 and 200,000 pounds) that it was necessary to cut the net in the center to save the large number of game fish. In three hauls the crew took 120,000 pounds of rough fish. While making the haul that netted the 200,000 pounds, fifteen men on the lead line and fifteen on the cork line could not budge the nets.

Bidders Make Your Sale!

This paper will bring bidders to your sale from over a large trade territory.

Bidders are attracted to a sale through Advertising, and the circulation of this paper insures a crowd. The larger the ad used, the greater is the attention given to what you have to sell. It also brings more and better bidders to your sale. ONE EXTRA BIDDER, in many cases, would more than offset the cost of additional space used.

WHY A SIZE LIMIT ON FISH?

This is a question often asked State Fish and Game Commission field men by sportsmen. They ask, "Why not let us keep all we catch because most undersided fish that are released and returned to the water die anyway."

The primary reason for Iowa's size limit on fish is based on the belief that each female fish should be allowed to remain in the lake or stream until it has had an opportunity to spawn at least once. By this line of reasoning the Commission believe that each pair of fish will at least replace themselves. If there is no size limit and fishermen are allowed to keep all they catch, thousands of females that have not reached the spawning age are taken which cannot replace themselves by natural reproduction.

With the tremendous increase in the number of fishermen, the Commission must take advantage of every opportunity to increase the natural reproduction of fish.

How many under-sized fish caught that are returned to the water die? This question whenever mentioned among fishermen is sure to start an argument. Actual experimental catching and releasing of fish has proven that a small percentage of these fish die after being returned to the water providing they have been properly handled. Of course, if the fisherman is "mad" because he has caught a small fish and handles it with dry hands and allows it to flop around the bottom of the boat for a while, it no doubt will die. Just what happens with no size limit? The fisherman keeps all he catches, large and small, and puts them on the stringer. If he happens to catch mostly small fish, when he has his legal limit, instead of being satisfied with his small string, he keeps on fishing and as larger fish are caught he takes off the small fish and throws them away and puts the larger fish on the stringer. These fish usually do die because the stringer has injured their gills.

The entire question depends on whether or not the fisherman himself understands the problem and is really interested in increasing and perpetuating fishing or just in his own meat and is not worried about anyone else's fishing or whether or not there is any fishing left for the years to come.

We may be able to get the squeak out of the car, but hard to get it out of the taxpayer when you put a new levy on him.

SECURITY PLAN AT A GLANCE

The administration's security program at a glance:

1. State and federal aid to the aged and helpless not eligible to participate in the new program to reach a marimum of $30 a month.

2. Maximum unemployment compensation under unemployment insurance section is not fixed. The president's committee on economic security suggested $15 a week for a maximum of 16 weeks.

3. Two categories of old age pensions under compulsory contributions in which payments would reach $15 a week.

4. Voluntary old age annuities to be sold by the government to aid in financing the pension scheme to total a maximum of $50 a month and not to exceed $9,000 at maturity.

5. Sixty-five years or more is fixed as the minimum age limit permitting participation in the old age pension projects.

6. Employees and employers must contribute alike in taxes in the compulsory old age contributions. The employer alone bears the 3 per cent payroll tax to finance the unemployment insurance project

7. A major share of the responsibility for administering the two leading phases of the security program—old age pensions and unemployment insurance—is to be borne by a new board of three to be appointed by President Roosevelt.

8. Payment of old age pensions does not begin until January 1, 1942. Disbursements to the aged who cannot be embraced by the plan can begin as soon as states enact proper legislation to match federal expenditures.

9 The entire project will cost the government about $100,000,000 the first year.

10. Health insurance is not included because of the inability of the medical profession to agree upon proper recommendations.

Serviceable Dress

Fifty years ago Mrs. Ida Weber moved from Germany to this country and settled, with her husband, in Butler county. She brought with her her best dress, a woolen gown which she valued very highly. She determined to keep it to be used only on special occasions. Since then every Sunday morning, she has gotten out this dress, carefully smoothed out the wrinkles, and put on to wear to church. On all of the week days during the entire fifty years she has kept the dress packed in cedar chips to insure safety from moths. Two years ago her husband died and Mrs. Weber moved to town to make her home, but she still clings to the "best" dress which she brought from her old home in Germany.

BUILDING A BANK ACCOUNT

We hear a good deal these days about balancing the budget. Governments are expected only to make the outgo equal the income because they require no sinking fund or surplus.

Individuals are interested in more than an even balance of income and expenditures. They must look ahead for unexpected demands and emergencies. No other way has ever been found for building up a surplus that will beat carrying a bank account and seeing that it grows continually by keeping expenditures below the receipts. That is the way almost every fortune started and it is the only practical way of starting one.

CATS AND MORE CATS

Mr. Walt Jamison, Glenwood, Ia. has found out how many cats roam over his orchard. Early in the winter he put out five box traps to catch rabbits that were girdling his fruit trees. He says, "In the last 2 months I have caught and killed 36 cats and there is no question about them eating the wild birds, as one of them ate too much fat meat (the bait in the trap) and became sick and threw it up together with a cardinal it had just eaten. We had a fine covey of quail that were raised on the place and I have been feding since they were the size of a sparrow but they have all disappeared. I believe the cats ate them up. I know they catch the young squirrels. I never see these cats in the daytime, wouldn't know there was one in the country, but they work all night and take an awful toll of the wildlife."

Think of it, 36 cats caught in the orchard, and Mr. Jamison did not know until he put out the traps that there were any cats around. He recommends a license for cats.

A simple firing suggestion: Don't cover all your fire with fresh coal. Always leave a part of the upper surface of the fire exposed. This will ignite the fuel gases escaping, thus you get more heat and less smoke and soot.

DO YOU KNOW?

That the rabbit season closes on February 1st?

That there is in Iowa only one poisonous snake and it is the rattle snake?

That snapping turtles are destructive to fish life? That they eat fish and have been seen taking young ducks while in the water?

That from all indications fox hunting is a very popular sport in Iowa? That five years ago the sight of a red fox in most parts of Iowa was news? Today it is commonplace.

That special permit tag is necessary to ship for pelts outside the State? That fox may be taken at any time as there is a continuous open season?

When baking or cooking dishes become very brown inside, fill them with buttermilk and let them stand several days. The acid in the milk will dissolve the stain.

Not For Indians

The Tama county Indian reservation is not so very far from Marshalltown and sometimes the braves from among the Mesquakies came to Marshalltown and want to buy some liquor. The police did not know whether the repeal of prohibition and the state liquor law made it legal to sell to Indians or not, so they wrote to Washington. They have recently received a very specific ruling from the U S. attorney general, saying that it is still absolutely illegal to sell liquor to an Indian, whether a full blood or of mixed blood, and he even mentions beer as on the prohibited list. This law was passed over half a century ago. Then an Indian was supposed to be ready to "go on the war path." Maybe they would yet if they got drunk. White men do sometimes.

AND THE GROUND HOG SAW HIS SHADOW!

Saturday, February 2nd, was one of the nicest days we have had this winter. The sun was out bright and strong all day long, melting a lot of snow and ice.

According to tradition, or superstition, on February 2nd Mr. Groundhog quits his winter snooze, stretches himself and comes out of his hole to look around. If he sees his shadow it scares him back into his hole, where he is said to remain for six weeks, during which time we can expect a lot of cold weather.

The Groundhog saw his shadow February 2nd. At least in all of [illegible].

Shamrocks Defeated By Renwick; Independents Win From Garner

SHAMROCKS LOST FAST GAME TO RENWICK QUINTET

The Klemme High School Shamrocks lost to the Renwick Scarlet Raiders on the Renwick floor Friday night 32 to 26, but nevertheless, put up one of their best performances of the year. Renwick has an exceptionally strong team this year and Renwick fans were of the opinion that the Shamrocks were one of the best teams to play on their court this year.

The first period started off slowly and Klemme held a 6 to 3 lead at the quarter. The second period the Shamrocks got hot and ran the count 17 to 7 at the half. Renwick was held to one field gool during the half. During the third period the Scarlet Raiders cut down the locals lead 25 to 19 and in the final quarter J. Carter and Gimer started a scoring drive which put their team in the lead and they held their advantage until the final gun 32 to 66.

Kaduce played a fine game at the pivot post, holding his man to one field goal. Stokesbary, Brinkman and Kilgore were the main point getters, with the latter racking up 5 goals and 3 gift shots for the evenings scoring honors. Klotzbach is to be commended on his splendid defensive game. Box scores were:

Jurors Drawn For March Term Of District Court

CORN-HOG FARMER NOW HAS PROBLEM OF HOLDING GAINS

Corn and hog farmers now have the problem of cinching the gains they made in prices for their products during 1934, the first year of planned corn- hog adjustments. Aided by the drought, the adjustment program has accomplished much in increasing farm income—how to hold these gains now challenges corn and hog producers.

There is a danger that short feed supplies and high feed prices will encourage farmers to plant an excessive acreage of corn this coming spring. Land taken out of production last year is as good as it ever was. Without control, that land could be planted to corn this year. The drought greatly cut the yield of corn last year, but a more normal growing season is expected this year. Then, too, hog and cattle numbers are down now and the usual amounts of corn will not be required.

Foreign markets are no better than they were a year ago—the fundamental effective demand for farm produce, particularly corn and hogs, has remained unchanged.

From the beginning of the 1934 control program, most farmers realized that some type of follow-up program would be needed. Farmers have this follow-up program in the new 1935 control plan now being presente dover the country. It is up to corn-hog farmers to continue reasonable production control to prevent the return of the condition of surpluses and low prices.

VAGABONDS WIN TWO GAMES FROM DOWS TIGERS

The Klemme Vagabonds drove to Dows Thursday night and came home with a couple of victories. The regulars won their game 27 to 17, and led all the way 6 to 0; 12 to 9; 18 to 13 and 27 to 17. The low ceiling was a handicap at the start, but the locals soon found a way to use it to their advantage and racked up enough goals to win.

THE ORIGIN OF EDITORS

A Shannon school boy was requested to write an essay the other day and "The Newspaper" was the subject. Here is the result:

"I don't know how newspapers came into the world. I don't think God does either. He ain't got nothing to say about 'em, and the Editor ain't in the Bible. I think the Editor is one of them missing links you hear about that stayed in the brush until after the flood, then stepped out and wrote it up, and has been here ever since. I don't think he ever dies. I never saw a dead one and never heard of one getting licked. I think he must live on ink and lead type 'cause my paw hain't paid his subscription in five years and I suppose the rest hain't neither."—Shannon City Messenger.

EDITORIAL

This extract from an article which appeared in "American Campus" goes to show that often times the qualities and characteristics we show during our school days are an indication of those we will have in later life. The extract consists, in part, of the notations under the name and picture of Richard Byrd in the Annapolis year-book for 1912.

"Richard Evelyn Byrd, athlete, leader in all right things, friend gentleman, from the time he entered as a plebe until the present, Dick has been putting his whole heart into everything he does, whether it be a little meeting that took place behind the old hospital, or in the gym or on the football field. No man deserved more from life, and got less, than he. Thyphoid caught him his second class cruise, forcing him is give up football the following fall. First class year, injuries kept him on the sidelines until his chance was gone. Then came the worst blow of all, a broken ankle just as he was whipping his gym team into shape for the season. Yet he didn't complain. He was the same old cheerful Dick.

"He has already lived a life rich in experience, and he will live a life richer still, but he will always give to life more than he asks."

What Movie Actor Or Actress Do You Like Best And Why?

My favorite movie actress is Joan Crawford. I like her best because of her fascinating eyes. Joan has such clever ways in which she acts. Clark Gable is one of her leading men and that makes the picture more interesting.—Elaine Buntenbach.

My favorite actress is Janet Gaynor. I don't know why, but it must be her acting that got em to like her more and more. I like other movie stars also, but she is the best one. I first saw her in "Sunny Side Up." with Charles Farrell. In that movie I liked her the best. She is one of the best looking stars off the stage.—Juanita Pavey.

My favorite movie actor is Will Rogers. I like Will Rogers for the clever ways he brings sentences out. Will Rogers plays in movies which are of the common class. People who see such movies can understand and live more with the shows. My second best character is Zasu Pitts. —Emily Paul.

My favorite movie actress is Shirley Temple. I choose her because I like her acting and singing. I think that she is a very good actress for her age. She is always full of life and pep and can take almost any kind of part. She is very good looking, and, if you ask me, is worth driving a few miles to see in a show.—Harold Kothenbeutel.

Eddie Cantor is my favorite actor. Maybe it's because he hasn't many pictures or maybe it's just the way he act and sings. In Kid Millions he offers the latest song hits and gayers. He is a young man who has inherited a treasure and has to go to Egypt to get it. The picture itself is well worth seeing, and Eddie makes it much better.—Melvin Schlei.

As far as movie actors are concerned I have no special favorites, but I like to see a good show. There is a great variety of pictures and it therefore takes actors with certain abilities to play one kind, while artors of different abilities play another. In a comedy I like to see Will Rogers, for he can get off some pretty good ones and still seem natural. In a love story I like Ronald Coleman and Loretta Young for they can be so gay one moment and the next be frightened, mad or else in a very sad mood. To liven things up I like a good western once in a while which stars John Wayne. —Lyndon Kilgore.

There was a great deal of enthusiasm among the members of the Senior class Friday as they gathered in groups and discussed the great coming event. They were to journey to Mason City Saturday and have their class pictures taken at the Russel Studio and therefore there was much debating about what to wear, etc.; and here's hoping their pictures do justice to their labors.

Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure nineteen pounds nineteen shillings and sixpence, result happiness. Annual income twenty pounds, annual expenditure twenty pounds ought and six, result misery.—Dickens.

Louisiana Lottery Was Last, Greatest of Kind

The Louisiana Lottery was founded in 1868 and it was said it sold $28,000,000 worth of tickets annually and paid out approximately half that amount each year. It was the last and the greatest of the lotteries.

The main offices of the "Louisiana," as it was called, were in the center of the city of New Orleans, in a pretentious looking building with opaque windows. In the courtyard was a shallow fountain, and in the pool of the fountain was a huge live alligator, viewed by opponents of the lottery as emblematic of the scheme. They claimed children of ticket buyers might as well be thrown to the alligator, instead of being beggared, as they inevitably would be.

The monthly drawing of the "Louisiana" was described as highly picturesque. Streets were crowded with ticket vendors, brokers and interested investors. The actual drawing took place in the old French opera house, before boxes occupied by fashionably dressed women. On the stage, acting as masters of ceremony and distributors of lucky chances, were two "commissioners," both well known Confederate war heroes. It was said they received between $15,000 and $30,000 a year for presiding over the ceremonies. One sat in a chair and received the prize tubes from a blindfolded boy, at every twentieth prize closing the wheel, from which the drawings were made, for the periodical stirring up that was ostensibly designed to guard against fraud. The other "commissioner," more than six feet tall, had a "wheel of fortune" of his own, much larger than the other, over which he presided.

Animals and Birds Feel and Act as Human Beings

Instances to show that animals have largely the same feelings and emotions as human beings were cited by the director of the Taranga Park zoo, when he told how several members of a herd of elephants in Africa had been observed to go to the aid of a wounded comrade, and a wallaby to give assistance to another wallaby that was blind. As another example of the protective instinct in animals, says the Detroit News, a male kangaroo will take up the rear in retreat in order to draw the brunt of possible danger while the does and their young escape.

Birds, such as Sarus cranes, dance as we do for the fun of the thing, and they exhibit great thought in their gyrations. Cockatoos employ the sentry system, posting one bird as a lookout while others feed on the ground; the quality of leadership possessed by animals is evidenced in the V-shaped formation of wild geese while flying.

The variations in behavior encountered among different kinds of animals are attributed largely to environment. Animals act generally in the same way in given circumstances.

Cause of Tides

Tides are caused by the gravitational attraction, or pull, of the sun and moon on the water and on the earth itself. The close relation that the times of high water bear to the times of the moon's meridian passage shows that the moon's influence on tides is much greater than that of the sun; it has been estimated that it is two and one-half times as great. The result of this attraction of the moon is to draw or heap up the water, in the parts of the earth nearest it. The surface of the earth rises and falls twice in a lunar day of about 24 hours and 52 minutes. The tides do not always rise to the same height, but every fortnight, after the new and full moon, they become much higher than they were in the alternate weeks. These high tides are called spring tides and the low ones neap tides.

Santo Domingo Quaint City

Most ancient of existing settlements of white men in the western hemisphere is the quaint city of Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic. Christopher Columbus founded the city and claimed for Spain the island of Haiti, of which the Dominican Republic occupies about two-thirds. In Columbus' day the colony was named Hispaniola. One of the principal sights of Santo Domingo is the fortress wall and old gate leading into the city from the mouth of the Ozama river. The gate was heavily barricaded and the wall fortified in the early years of the city's history. Santo Domingo is capital of the republic.—Chicago Tribune.

Cork Used in Fabrics

One of the most unusual uses of cork is in the manufacture of certain fabrics in France. By using a specially constructed machine, thin pieces of cork are placed in chemical baths to remove the resinous parts which make the substance more or less brittle. After this has been removed the sheets may be folded and bent without breaking. By combining the cork sheets with any suitable cloth an excellent waterproof material may be obtained. The usual method is to glue the cork to the cloth.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Airplane Idea in 1640

The airplane and submarine were thought of in the middle of the Seventeenth century. This was declared by an official of the University of South Wales. He referred to a book written about 1640 by Lord Herbert Raglan. The title is "A Century of Invention," and the volume contains 100 suggestions, among them being ideas for airplanes and submarines.

Niagara Falls Far From Being Highest and Widest

Niagara is neither the highest nor the widest of the world's cataracts but it has other claims to distinction, asserts a writer in the Chicago Tribune.

Yosemite falls, one of the five cataracts in Yosemite National park, is a double falls. Its first leap carries the water down 1,430 feet or nearly nine times the 168 feet that Niagara dumps its torrent. The second stage is 820 feet or twice the depth of Niagara.

In width, Niagara, including Goat island and both the American and Canadian falls, measures 5,300 feet. Famous Victoria falls on the Zambesi river in central Africa measures 5,700 feet in width, also including the islands on its brink. In height, Victoria, named after England's shortest queen, would make about two Niagaras, varying from 256 to 343 feet.

A much less known cataract, Iguassu in Brazil, is at times 10,000 feet wide, and 210 feet high—almost twice the width and one and one-fourth the height of Niagara.

Niagara's claims to prominence then must lie in factors other than height and breadth. Some of them are its majestic beauty, easy accessibility, and the fact that it is the accepted Mecca of American honeymooners. In physical attributes it attains supremacy in only one feature—flow of water. More water flows over its brink than over any other three cataracts put together.

Cleanliness, the Heart and Soul of Sanitation

Cleanliness, they say, is next to Godliness. In emphasizing the fact that neglect of the simplest sanitary precautions will result in the development and spread of various diseases, the Health News quotes the following definition of cleanliness from a recent issue of the Mysore Arogya, monthly bulletin of the Mysore (India) state department of health:

"Cleanliness is the heart and soul of sanitation, and sanitation is a sine qua non of public health. Environmental cleanliness, personal cleanliness, soil cleanliness, and in fact, cleanliness in everything, is essential for maintaining health and preventing disease. By cleanliness is meant not merely physical and esthetic cleanliness, but biological cleanliness, which means freedom from disease germs. Unfortunately nature has not endowed human beings with a sixth sense, the microscopic eye. We are unable, therefore, to perceive the harmful germs with our unaided eyes. What appears to be bright and neat, we take for granted is clean. This is, however, our daily experience with the food we eat, water we drink, clothes we wear and utensils we use. It is an irrefutable fact that cleanliness, in the biological and true sense, offers sure protection against diseases."

Naming Bermuda Parishes

In 1618 Richard Norwood, English surveyor for the then Bermuda Co., divided the Island of Bermuda into eight tribes or parishes. Eight of the largest stockholders were assigned a parish, which was in accordance to custom to bear the name of the owner. Bermuda continues the original parish names, which points out that Hamilton parish was named after the marquis of Hamilton; Smith after Sir Thomas Smith; Cavendish after the earl of Cavendish; Pembroke after the earl of Pembroke, Paget after Lord Paget; Southampton after the earl of Southampton; Mansil after Sir Robert Mansfield, who later sold his share to the earl of Warwick, when the name was changed to Warwick; Sandy's after Sir Edwin Sands.

St. George's Company

John Ruskin commenced publication in 1871 of a monthly periodical called Fors Clavigera, addressed particularly to workingmen, and urging them to join him in forming an organization to be known as St. George's company, for the purpose of developing among the working classes a greater love of the beautiful and raising the common standard of architecture and home surroundings in rural life. He protested against "the tyranny and defilement" of machinery. He set apart about $35,000, a tenth of his private fortune, to promote the success of this society, of which he was chosen grand master. The workingmen responded poorly to his appeals and the venture was regarded as a failure.

The U. S. Coast Guard

The coast guard service of the United States is under the jurisdiction of the Treasury department, created by the act approved January 28, 1915, whereby the revenue cutter and life saving services of the United States were merged into one organization, to be known thereafter as the coast guard. The coast guard is essentially an emergency service, and may be called upon for any special work of a nature for which no other vessels are provided. It is a military arm of the government, its officers being commissioned by the President, and holding rank with officers of the army and navy.

Germans in Texas

The revolutions of 1848 and 1849 in Europe drove thousands of people to foreign lands and many came to America. Between 1847 and 1850, 15,000 Germans landed at Galveston, Texas. In 1834 a ship bearing German immigrants was wrecked on Galveston island and in 1838 a Germania society was organized in New York to establish a colony in Texas. A boat load of 180 people reached Galveston on Christmas day, 1839.

Two Women Nominated as Presidential Candidates

Back in 1872 a Mrs. Victoria Claflin Woodhull (later Martin) was nominated for the presidency at Vineland, N. J., by a convention styling itself the Equal Rights party. But she spent election day that year in the Ludlow street jail in New York city, where she had been confined after being charged with circulating obscene literature. The same party nominated Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood for President of the United States in 1884 and again in 1888.

The Equal Rights party, observes a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, was a suffrage organization, and both Mrs. Woodhull's and Mrs. Lockwood's campaigns amounted chiefly to a suffrage propaganda, since neither of them could have held the office had they been elected. The amendment to the Constitution giving nation-wide suffrage to women was not adopted until 1920.

Mrs. Lockwood was a lawyer and reformer, born in 1830 at Royalton, N. Y. She was educated at Genesee college, Lima, N. Y., and taught school for eleven years. Then she studied law and was admitted to the bar in the District of Columbia in 1873. Six years later she was admitted to practice before the Supreme court, under a law which she had been instrumental in getting passed.

She was born Belva Ann Bennett, was married in 1848 to Uriah H. McNall, who died five years later, and in 1868 to Dr. Ezekiel Lockwood. She died in 1917.

World's Richest Street, Chandni Chowk in Delhi

What is the richest street in the world? Without taking into account the environs of the Stock exchange and Wall street, where unseen fortunes change hands, the little-known Chandni Chowk in Delhi has substantial claims, says a writer in the Montreal Herald. It has often been referred to as the richest street in Asia, and, unlike other commercial thoroughfares, the greater part of its wealth is there for all to see.

But many are the treasures which are hidden away in secret recesses of the shops of curio dealers and jewelers in that picturesque street. One of the dealers, the walls of whose establishment are covered with letters of appointment from Highnesses and Excellencies of all descriptions, has manufactured countless wonderful golden and jeweled embroideries for crowned heads and ruling princes. He was responsible for the historic peacock gown, costing no less than one thousand pounds, which the late Lady Curzon wore at the Durbar ball, attended by four thousand guests in the Delhi fort in 1908. Here also are all the richest of the embroidery merchants, whose cloths and cloaks, scintillating with costly ornaments, are not only intended for reigning princes, but for state elephants.

Author of Ray's Arithmetic

Joseph Ray, educator, was born in Virginia in 1807. His early education was self-obtained, and he began to teach school at sixteen. Subsequently he studied at Washington college, in Pennsylvania, and at the school which is now Ohio university, Athens. He obtained the degree of M. D. at the Ohio Medical college, and was for a time a surgeon in the Cincinnati hospital. From 1834 to 1851 Doctor Ray taught mathematics at Woodward college, Cincinnati, and when it was converted into a public high school he became its principal. During this time he published his series of school books on arithmetic and algebra. From about 1849 he was president of the board of directors of the Cincinnati House of Refuge. He died in Cincinnati in 1865.

Naming the U. S. A.

The name United States of America is really an evolutionary product, a name which began to develop as soon as the colonies banded themselves together, notes a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Some of the old local coins refer to the "Unity States of America." The Declaration of Independence asserts "that these united colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent states." It also speaks of them as the United States of America. So do the Articles of Confederation and Constitution. The "authority" by which the name is used is that of the people, as delegated to the Continental congress and the other bodies which shaped the form of our government.

Indian "Love Flower"

A traditional "charm flower" reputed to have been used by Pawnee Indian braves to make Pawnee maidens reciprocate in love is the red lobelia, otherwise known as the cardinal flower and the Red Betty. Pawnee traditions state that the lobelia, ginseng, two other plants and red earth paint brewed together with several hairs from the head of a desired maiden made the stubborn one respond to the lover who owned the magic mixture.

"Sluggard Waker" Used

"The Sluggard Waker" was an important figure during the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries. His duty was to awaken the sluggards who had fallen asleep. He walked up and down the aisles during church service with a long stick, tickling the noses of sleeping ladies with a fox's brush, on one end of the stick, and smartly rapping the heads of sleeping gentlemen with a heavy doorknob on the other end.—Collier's Weekly.

Yokes for Gossips; Used to Punish Early Scolds

The most effective punishment that can be administered to any wrongdoer, according to criminologists, is to give the malefactor a dose of his own medicine. At least, that was the method used during the Sixteenth century to punish scolds and gossips. Gossips and scolds were punished by being yoked together and made to talk incessantly until they not only ran out of something to talk about, but were winded by their war of words.

The "Scolds Yoke" was a part of the regular equipment of every medieval jail. This yoke consisted of a board which was hinged together in such a way that two women could be yoked into it at a time. The head went through one hole and the hands through others. In this way they could express their views of each other with entire freedom, but with the assurance that the opposite party could not hit back. Offenders who were confined in this species of pillory often wore themselves out in denouncing each other, and sometimes would fall down on the ground together, totally exhausted.—Montreal Herald.

Finds Young Hedgehogs Soft, Also Inquisitive

One evening, when it was almost dark, I noticed a small creature come out from under a shed in my garden, and nimbly trot down the path and across a patch of lawn, writes a well-known naturalist. Suspecting what the animal was, I determined to become better acquainted, and so the next night found me waiting patiently in the shadow. Sure enough, about the same time of the evening my friend appeared again, this time, however, followed by three babies, all in a straight line. I quickly picked up the last of the procession and carried my prize into the house.

It was, of course, a young hedgehog, and was most interestingly inquisitive. There was no sign of fear, and after the first moment of my picking him up, showed no intention of making a ball of himself. I put him on the dining table, and he quickly investigated everything he could see. Although the light was on he did not seem to mind, and even allowed me to touch him again without remonstrance. He was delightfully soft to the touch underneath, and the spikes did not inconvenience one as long as the hand was held flat. Not wishing to make his mother uneasy, I soon returned him to the garden, where the rest of the family were sauntering about the lawn.—Montreal Herald.

Frenchmen Found Humor in Idea of Guillotine

Doctor Guillotine, the inventor of the French machine for executions, is rumored to have died by the instrument. The guillotine was rather an improvement than an invention, for similar contrivances had been in use in other countries; Scotland, where the regent Morton was so decapitated in 1581; Yorkshire (the Halifax "gibbet"); Germany, Italy, even southern France.

It was in December, 1789, that Doctor Guillotine put his plan before the constituent assembly, but it was not adopted till October, 1791.

Apparently deputies found the subject humorous. "With my machine, messieurs," said the doctor, "I whisk off your head (vous fais sauter la tete) in a twinkling, and you have no pain." "Whereat," adds Carlyle, in his historical present tense, "they all laugh."

To Tribune Editor: 2-9-35

Why such expensive property for funeral homes? The bereaved have no time to admire the place. They have other things on their minds. The undertakers ought to co-operate and build a home in the corner of each cemetery and all use the same place. Do away with the high priced property. There are about five of a hundred who can stand the prices charged today. The people should rise up and call a halt.—A. E. Humphreys, 3606 Arthur Ave. Des Moines.

Shamrocks And Kanawha Staged Real Battle Friday

KLEMME LOST TO KANAWHA IN OVERTIME GAME 28-26

Little Shamrocks Won From The Kanawha Reserves 22-2

Klemme basketball fans who attended the Klemme and Kanawha high school clash on the local floor Friday night, had the privilege of seeing the best and fastest game played here in years. Both teams literally fought their heart out thru the four periods of regular playing time, only to find the count knotted 26 to 26. In the overtime period, Tande, sharp-shotting Kanawha guard, found the hoop with another of his spectacular long shots to win the game 28 to 26.

Kanawha started off to an early lead at the quarter 8 to 2 and then Klemme outscored them in each of the other three periods. In the second period E. Barz started things off with a pretty shot from the center of the floor. Stokesbary added two more long ones; Kilgore made one from out in the court and Klotzbach slipped in for a set-up under the basket, to bring the count 12 to 15 at the half. During the third period the Shamrocks cut down the Kanawha lead still more 20 to 21 and in the fourth period took the lead for the first time; at one time leading 26 to 23. Kanawha was able to add three points to their total and playing time ended 26-26. Tande found the basket in the middle of the overtime period for the only extra points, although the Klemme boys missed a number of shots by a narrow margin.

The game was nip and tuck all the way thru, with neither team holding a big advantage at any time. Each team made 12 field goals, but Kanawha racked up 4 gift shots to 2 for Klemme.

STATE-WIDE CHURCH LOYALTY CRUSADE STARTS MARCH 3

Protestant churches of every denoination in practically every town and city in the state are joining in a Church Loyalty Crusade under the direction of the United Church Missions Council of America.

The Crusade extends through 3 periods: Jan. and Feb. are months for organization and set-up plans in each local church. March 3rd to Easter Sunday, April 21st intensive loyalty crusade in every participating church; April 21st to June 1st conservation period.

The local Methodist church had 18 representatives attend the meeting for instructions at Mason City last Friday afternoon and evening. Those attending were Rev. and Mrs. Zabilka, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Lemke, Tom Nelson, Edwin Josten, Asa Gibbs, Mrs. C. A. Arnold, Mrs. Verner Nelson, Mrs. Henry Busse, Mrs. Lester Stille, Mrs. Will Stille, Mrs. Herman Paul, Mrs. Art Wellemeyer, Mrs. Ben Coobs, Mrs. Emil Patet, Mrs. C. A. Larsen and Miss Eula Veenstra.

The launching of the Crusade proper will be March 3rd in every co-operating Church in the state. On this date every member and friend of the church is asked to be present. The local Methodist church has as its slogan "No empty seats on March 3rd, but every seat occupied."

UP TO 5% OF PIG'S RATION CAN BE SOYBEANS

If more than 5 percent of the pig's ration is soybeans the carcass is liable to be soft and unsuited to lard production, Iowa State College animal nutritionists conclude after ending their third year of experiments on ways of feeding soybeans in the pig ration.

The three years' tests indicate that up to 5 percent soybeans can be fed without affecting the carcass firmness. But over 5 percent the larger the proportion of beans the more marked the softening effect.

Eight different lots of pigs were fed various rations. Each lot had good alfalfa pasture. Last year rape pasture was used. Contrary to expectations of some, but agreeing with last year's results on rape pasture, pigs fed no supplement showed the lowest cost per hundred pounds of gain—$4.29. Feed costs near the market average were assumed.

Hardest carcasses and most suitable for lard production were produced by pigs fed no supplement, those fed tankage and those fed soybean oilmeal. The margin per pig above feed costs for those fed oilmeal was the smallest of any of the lots.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT

Roy Champlin, Tony Brandt, Lester Vance, and Charles Fletcher, all of Clinton, Iowa, decided to go on a rabbit hunt along the Wapsipinicon river, southeast of DeWitt. The shooting was very good, rabbits being plentiful. While going through a piece of timber one of the boys noticed what looked like a rabbit in the crotch of a tree about five feet from the ground. He thought he was seeing things and called the other boys to his side. They all had a good look and finally decided they were in their right minds and proceeded to flush the rabbit from his tree perch and killed it. These boys reported this incident to Deputy Warden R. B. Courtwright and all are willing to swear the story is true.

Warden Courtwright says he did not know he had tree climbing rabbits in his territory, but from now on he is going to instruct rabbit hunters to look in trees if they are not able to find rabbits where they should be.

LITTLE SHAMROCKS HAVE FINE RECORD ON HOME FLOOR

Friday night the Little Shamrocks ended their home season by defeating the Kanawha Reserves 22 to 2. In checking over the year's record find that the Little Shamrocks are undefeated on their home floor and have set up a remarkable record for defensive play on their home court. Only three teams have succeded in scoring two field goals against them and the Corwith Seconds with whom they are tied for the Seven Eaglets championship, was the only team to make both goals in the same half. Furthermore the team as a whole has an average of only 3.8 personal fouls per game. Two teams, Corwith and Kanawha, made two charity shots; others made one or less.

Their record against opponents on their home floor is:

Klemme 3; Goodell 0
Klemme 17; Crystal Lake 4
Klemme 19; Hayfield 4
Klemme 17; Ventura 3
Klemme 15; Woden 3
Klemme 14; Corwith 6
Klemme 22; Kanawha 2

Thus they have an average score per game of 15.3 points to their opponents 3.1.

PANNHOFF'S CORN WINS AT CORN SHOW

At the Annual Corn Show held at the Iowa State College there were exhibited from Hancock County several samples of corn by Caspar Pannhoff. Mr. Pannhoff, who had competition with many entries from the north section won third with his 10 ear class and third in his 80 ear class. He likewise exhibited Manchu Soybeans on which he won 7th place in competition with 30 growers over the state. The grand champion exhibits went to the south central section of Iowa.

HANCOCK FARMERS GIVEN MORE AAA PAY

Two hundred corn-hog checks totaling $16,000 arrived late Saturday afternoon to be distributed beginning Tuesday to farmers. The amount is a delayed portion of the second payment due. County agent S. J. Oberhauser said Saturday that 1,200 Hancock County farmers had signed the 1935 corn-hog reduction program. Reports had been received for all 16 townships.

FARMERS URGED TO PLANT ONLY TESTED SEEDS

The state department of agriculture is making preparations to test a large number of farm seeds which will be offered for sale this spring. To prevent the spread of noxious weeds, farmers are admonished to plant only seed which has been tested and which they know to be free from bad weed seed.

CORN LOANS ESSENTIAL PART OF CORN-HOG PROGRAM

Plans to continue Government corn loans have been announced by Chester C. Davis, Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, according to S. J. Oberhauser, county agent. Provision for corn loans will be an essential part of the 1935 corn hog program. It is expected that the loans on the 1935 crop will be handled in a manner similar to that applied to the present loans and that they will be available only to those who sign the corn-hog contract. Corn loans and corn production adjustment must go together. The corn loan cannot successfully stand alone without the security of production control. Each supplements the other.

The amount to be loaned per bushel on the 1935 crop has not yet been determined, and cannot be determined until later in the season when the essential facts in regard to probable production and feed requirments have been developed.

DO YOU KNOW?

That the most critical time of the year is at hand for our game? As we approach spring the natural supply of food becomes more scarce. Severe storms in February and March have been, in the past, the time when we have our heaviest loss of birds. See that your birds have food.

That birds are gifted with exceptional eyesight? Watch a sparrow hawk sometime, hover in the air and pounce on a grasshopper from a height that would make the hopper invisible to man; or an Osprey flying over a lake and see him pounce on a fish.

That the ants destroy entire coveys of quail at hatching time? They make their attack after the eggs are "piped" and before the young birds are out of the shell.

That one of these long winter evenings is a fine time to clean up the shot gun and put the hunting equipment in shape for the next season?

FARMERS' UNION NEWS

A large number of members and visitors attended the February meeting of the Liberty Local of the Farmers' Union, held at the Liberty schoolhouse No 7 Monday evening, February 4.

The greater part of the evening was spent in discussing topics fo the day. Ben Bernig, of Burchin l. gave an interesting summary of the national convention of the Farmers' Union held at Sioux Falls, S. Dak. After the meeting a very good program was given and refreshments were served by the committee.

The next meeeting of the Liberty Local will be held Monday evening, March 4 at Liberty No. 7 school.

WHO'S RUNNING THE SHOW ANYWAY?

A short time ago it was announced that Robert M. Felsenthal, an executive of Sears-Roebuck, had taken leave of absence from the mail order house and been given a "special assignment" on the AAA payroll. Thus the record of big business executives on the public payrolls continues.

The Farm Board had its Legge who relinquished a $100,000-a-year job with the International Harvester Co., for one of a few thousand dollars a year to help the Hoover administration kid the farmers; Coddington leaves the Standard Oil Co., and a fat salary to become the directing genius of the Roosevelt Home Owner's Loan Corporation and Felsenthal, the mail order executive, becomes another of the Roosevelt sidewalk farmers.

And yet we are handed the blahblah that there has been a "new deal" for agriculture! — Reprinted from the Farm Holiday News, of February 1, 1935.

After a series of three tests the winning side "takes the cake" which is a party given by the losing side. The first test has been given and the boys hold the upper hand by four points.

The sophomore English class is making a study of news writing.

Alida Schubert was called home Thursday on account of the illness of her mother.

How Did You Enjoy Having Your Picture Taken?

Does a duck swim? It was great, of course. One had to be a little afraid that our head would never be on the same angle again, but no one really cared whether it was or not—we were having our pictures taken. Being shot isn't the only thing which happens in the course of a picture taking day—there's a show, eats, (mostly short ribs) and many other things.—Esther Trampel.

Anyone who didn't enjoy having their pictures taken isn't really and truly a senior of "'35". It was heaps of fun. We listened to a radio all the way down, got in on the latest news. Our car was the last to be shot, so we had plenty of time to really look over the studio, get acquainted with the manager, etc. The taking of the pictures was really a snap; all you had to do was sit on an organ stool and the photographer would twist your head wherever he happened to want it. If you didn't grin to perfection he would tell you something that would bring the desired result. In the afternoon after a five minute dinner we saw Will Rogers in "County Chairman." —? ? ?

Having your picture taken is all right, but when waiting for the proofs the suspense is terrible. We had a nice day at Mason City. We also were taken to a good show, Will Rogers in "County Chairman." We boys spent much of our time looking at new cars.—B. E. Schaper.

"Smile! Now hold that position, moisten your lips—that's fine." The very thought of phrases that inhabit the photographer's room makes me shudder. Imagine waiting in line for three hours, being late for lunch and going through the agony of keeping one's hair combed all for a few antagonizing minutes before the camera. I am sure I can find more interesting things to do.—Ruth Wellemeyer.

There isn't so much enjoyment in just having your picture taken because all you have to do is hold your head just the way the photographer tells you to, or puts it; then moisten your lips. Really the most enjoyment in having your picture taken is the trip and what you can do in the city. One thing I enjoyed most was the trip we took window-shopping for new cars and seeing the New Ford V-8 and getting the inside dope on it. I would get a Ford if I were getting one. Even at that we all had a fine trip and a good day.—Loren Gast.

MEMORY BOOKS

Many of the pupils in school bring small memorandum books, and these are passed to almost every student in school so that they may write a short verse or bit of sentiment in them. Often these get on one's nerves, especially when three or four are handed to you just as you become deeply interested in a good book. But perhaps one should not be disgusted or think he is wasting time. Think how much pleasure the owner of one of these books will get when he reads it thirty, forty or fifty years from now. Then too, think how proud you would be if one of your fellow students should become president and you could say, "He wrote in my memory book when we went to school." At any rate, these books, if kept, will be the means of recalling many happy associations and friendships.—L. S.

"THE FOLKS" ARRIVES AT LAST

After a long time of impatient waiting, we have received our new book, "The Folks" by Ruth Suckow.

There has been a wild scramble in the English classes to see who would get to read it first, and we decided that the fairest way would be to draw sticks.

"The Folks" ought to be interesting to us because it has Belmond for its setting and because it was written by an Iowan. For my part I think it is a good books, but with the large sum of 726 pages, I think you would have to have your face lifted after you got through with it. —Melvin Jensen.

ANOTHER EPIDEMIC REPORTED IN KLEMME

Another epidemic has been reported in K. H. S. the last week or two. It seems that several of the girls fell victim to this epidemic shortly after Christmas and now many are in it clutches. One by one it has taken its victim until the number has amounted to twelve or thirteen, even including a teacher. It seems that Santa Claus brought the germs down the chimney. It breaks out—not in the form of red measles—but red triangular scarfs, worn around the neck.—D. G. & N. W.

Creamery Shows Increase Over Last Year's Business

ANNUAL CREAMERY MEETING WAS HELD HERE FRIDAY

Over Fifty Stockholders Present For Annual Election Of Officers

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Klemme Co-Operative Creamery was held at the First National Bank Friday afternoon. About fifty stockholders were present.

Printed reports of the past year's business were distributed. A substantial increase is noted throughout the entire report. A good increase in the amount of butter handled was especially encouraging. Approximately twenty-five new patrons were gained over last year, bringing the total number of patrons to a few over five hundred

During the past year 2,473,856 pounds of cream were received which made 801,017 pounds of butter. To better realize what a lot of butter this is, we will say that in round numbers the local creamery turned out over 400 tons of butter.

In dollars and cents the business of the past year showed a good increase and the future looks good for the creamery.

Officers Elected

H. R. Stromer, president; E. J. Arnold, vice president and J. E. Stibe, treasurer, were all re-elected by a large majority vote.

Peter Josten, who has been secretary for several years, and Walter Lemke, were the candidates for the office of secretary. The vote for secretary was close, with Walter Lemke leading when the final ballot was counted.

W. H. Lemke, whose term as director expired, was replaced by Emery Schaefer. There were quite a number of candidates to represent that district on the first ballot, but on the second ballot Schaefer went in by a large majority vote. The other directors are Lippo Blank, Otto Pringnitz, Joe Schuldt and C. J. Wille. Paul Mueller is the buttermaker and manager, and George Carolus is the assistant buttermaker. Wayne Pavey is the helper at the creamery.

Other minor business was taken up at the meeting and a dairyman was on hand to give a talk on butter and dairying.

CRYSTAL LAKE DEFEATED SHAMROCKS 47 TO 29

Little Shamrocks Beat Crystal Lake Reserves To Win Conference Cup

The Klemme High School Shamrocks drove to Crystal Lake Friday night and split a double bill with with the Fishermen fives.

The Shamrock regulars lost 47 to 29 to a unbeatable Crystal Lake five that sank shots from all over the floor. and held a lead all through the game: 10 to 2 at the quarter; 21 to 11 at the half and 31 to 23 at the third quarter. Early in the fourth period the Shamrocks brought the count 33 to 28, but the Crystal Lake boys put on another scoring spurt and boosted the count 47 to 29 at the end of the game.

Kilgore's method of play failed to stop the speedy little Scanlon who rained in 8 field goals and a pair of charity tosses for the evening's scoring honors. Stokesbary, who was second high with 6 goals and 3 gift shots, turned in a performance that was a fitting climax to his final game of the scheduled season. He now has left three tournaments in which to play as he is the only member of the regulars who will be lost through graduation. Klotzbach also turned in a good defense game. But the team as a whole failed to click with their usual precision.

Klemme's Little Shamrocks clinched their claim on the conference cup as they defeated the Crystal Lake seconds 12 to 9, holding their opponents to one field goal. Klemme led 2 to 0 at the quarter. The score was tied 5-5 at the half. The local lads pulled away 11 to 6 at the third period and were able to protect that lead through a thrilling final period 12 to 9.

KEEP CORN FROM RATTLING

The latest racket is to pour water on corn before it is weighed for selling.

The secretary of a statewide association engaged in some phase of agriculture on a recent visit to Mason City stopped at a filling station somewhere on No. 65 south of Mason City.

There a truck driver was busy pouring water on his load of corn.

"I'm doing this to keep the corn from rattling," said the driver, in reply to queries. He also admitted that it would increase the weight of his corn about 800 pounds and bring him about $12 more for the sale of the load. He had already weighed the corn where he had purchased it from the farmer and whatever additional load he had was velvet.

Corn this year is exceedingly dry. The cobs absorb large quantities of water without showing it, grain men point out. Those buying corn have been urged to be on the lookout for practices of this kind.

American Bankers Association President Announces Move to Stimulate Newspaper Advertising

NEW YORK.—Plans for stimulating wider use of informative newspaper advertising by banks in promoting public understanding and confidence in regard to existing banking conditions and methods have been announced by R. S. Hecht, President of the American Bankers Association, as a part of his organization's activities in aid of business recovery.

A general groundwork was prepared through a nationwide survey of advertising by oanks relative to their willingness to extend justifiable loans to industry and trade. This, he said, revealed that a large number in all parts of the country are pursuing aggressive policies along this line and encouraging their customers to develop forward-looking business plans. "It is our aim to aid in fostering this constructive attitude wherever possible," he said.

The Theme of New Advertising

The association's Advertising Department, under the direct supervision of the general executive officers, has prepared, at the headquarters in New York City, an informative advertising series for the use of member banks in the association to aid them in developing in their own communities better general public understanding regarding banking, Mr. Hecht said.

"The underlying theme of this advertising is that sound banking is based on helpful human relations and that it has a unity of interest with the people of its community which binds them together with a common purpose," he said.

"We are confident that if a clear understanding of this is brought home to the people in all our banking communities, it will go far in restoring the public confidence which good banking deserves. A bank in which people deservedly believe is doubly safe. It is to the public interest for the people to have confidence in their banks.

The Place of Advertising

"We feel that bank advertising has a special public duty to perform in this connection under existing conditions. The copy which will be supplied in the service we have developed will not only aid the individual bank in promoting the use of its own facilities but is also aimed to bring about with the aid of newspaper advertising a clearer public viewpoint regarding the essential part it occupies in the life of its community."

Mr. Hecht emphasized in regard to the new advertising facilities being offered to the members of the association that they are not a profit making venture and that there is no intention to disturb existing advertising arrangements, the idea being that these institutional services shall supplement rather than replace present plans, or that they will give assistance to member banks now lacking satisfactory arrangements.

MANY BANKS LONG LIVED

In the United States—

168 Banks over 100 years old.
2,472 Banks over 50 years old.
10,391 Banks over 25 years old.

There are in the United States 168 banks that have been in continuous existence for more than one hundred years. There are 2,472 banks over fifty years old, while 64% of all the banks in this country, or 10,391, are twenty-five years old or older.

In other words, practically two-thirds of the banks in this country have come through several successive periods of depression and panic, including 1907, 1914, 1920 and 1929-33.

The Oldest Bank

The oldest bank in the country, which is in Boston, was chartered February 17, 1784.

In the 64% of banks that are twenty-five years old or older is lodged a major portion of the banking resources of the nation. In commenting recently upon the stability of a great majority of the banks in the United States, Dr. Harold Stonier, Educational Director of the American Bankers Association, said:

"The fact that we have so many banks that have been in existence a long period of years is an eloquent tribute to the genius of American managerial ability, for no other country has experienced such wild gambling eras and resultant periods of business stagnation as those through which our country has passed at frequent intervals during the past century."

NEW WEALTH FROM SOIL

New wealth which comes from the soil is of special interest to those to whom falls the responsibility of maintaining our credit structure.

Unless agriculture is successful farm borrowers cannot ultimately succeed, neither can the banks they serve. Foreclosure sales are not a sound basis for good farming or good banking. Bankers, therefore, are as much interested in the permanent success of the agricultural industry as are the farmers, whether the deposits come directly from farm patrons, or indirectly through the ordinary channels of business.—D. H. Otis, Director of Agriculture, American Bankers Association.

Electricity in Body, but No Electric Organ

There is no special electric organ in the human body as there is in certain types of fishes—the electric eel, etc. Electric sparks and discharges from the hair and skin are usually symptoms of frictional electricity. For example, the friction of the leather soles of shoes on the woolen rugs in a heated house may produce enough electricity to cause sparks to jump from the person's fingers to a lamp fixture or metal hinge. Atmospheric conditions and differences in the conditions of muscular, nervous and general health may account for individual differences with regard to these electric sparks.

According to textbooks of physiology, every contraction of a muscle, the secretion of a gland, and probably also nutritional changes in the tissues, are associated with electrical phenomena, which may be demonstrated by a sensitive galvanometer and suitable methods. Before any muscular contraction there is a change in the electrical condition of the muscle, and even the heart beats are said to be associated with electrical phenomena. Similar electrical changes are also found in the living nerves.—Detroit News.

Soldier Bonus Demands Traced to Indian Wars

The bonus for former warriors is as old as the Indian wars of the early settlers, according to an authority, who reviews the fight between the English settlers in Connecticut with the Pequots, which occurred in 1637.

The Pequots, most feared tribe in Connecticut, had subjugated the other Indians and the determination of the white settlers on a war, though they were inexperienced in Indian fighting, was a "remarkable action to take," the writer says.

The General court decided on the war at Hartford, May 1, 1637, and by July 13, the same year, the Indian power had been broken. The white men struck quickly, killing men, women and children as they drove the Indians from the state. Then came the aftermath, just as it has in modern days.

The Indian fighters demanded bonuses, and were given lands in the former country of the Pequots, now New London county. Taxes were increased and increased interest in preparation for other wars was noted. The leaders then fighting wrote their memoirs, and altercations arose as to who won the war.

Handel's "Messiah"

According to a book entitled "George Frederic Handel," by Newman Flower, "The Messiah" was written in London and filed away by Handel, who had no idea of producing it when he wrote it, due to the fact that he was so discouraged over the reception given him in London and the indifference displayed for his compositions, that he had about made up his mind to return to Germany when he received a pressing invitation to go to Dublin and there produce some of his other compositions. Whether it was because the Irish are a music-loving people, or that the type of religious music for which Handel was noted appealed strongly to them, is not known, but he achieved tremendous success in Dublin. With persuasion, he was induced to produce "The Messiah." Of all of his compositions given in Dublin, "The Messiah" achieved the greatest fame and Handel's success from then on was assured.

Engines Have Stomach Ache

Even railway engines have their "stomach" aches, and their diet, particularly liquid, has to be watched, says a bulletin of the motive power department of the Canadian National railways. It all comes about through the property possessed by water of dissolving certain minerals in the earth. To distil water for locomotives would entail enormous expense; some locomotives use about 14,000 gallons of water on an average run of 185 miles. Therefore treating plants have to be maintained to break down the minerals in the water, particularly sulphate of lime, carbonate of lime and carbonate of magnesia that deposit a scale in the boilers which causes loss of power and overheating of the boiler plates and damage to the tubes—in other words "stomach" ache.

Public Executions

In the early days of Ohio execution by hanging was public and no step was omitted which might by publicity tend to deter persons from committing capital offenses. Before the condemned man was hanged his funeral was "preached," whilst other means were taken to show the consequences of homicide. For example, in 1825 in Newark a murderer was condemned to be hanged, the gallows was erected, the grave dug, the coffin made, the shroud procured, and the condemned man vested in it. He was then placed within the coffin, while the sermon was "preached" to a large audience, assembled to listen to the services which were then to be followed by the execution.

Coffee Grows Wild

The negro republic of Haiti is a land of small farmers, only 2 per cent, it is estimated, of the agricultural production being the outcome of the plantation method. Coffee is the chief crop. The crop actually grows wild and is harvested rather than cultivated.

London Is Divided Into Districts as U. S. Cities

In London north of the Thames, the main distinction lies between west and east. From the eastern boundary of the city proper, an area covering the greater part of the city of Westminster, and extending into Chelsea, Kensington, Paddington and Marylebone, is associated with the wealthier class life.

Mayfair, north of Piccadilly, and Belgravia, south of Knightsbridge, are unofficial names for the richest residential districts. East of it is an abrupt transition to the district known as the "east end," as distinguished from the wealthy "west end," a district of poor streets, roughly coincident with the boroughs of Stephney and Poplar, Shoreditch and Bethnal Green.

On the Thames below London bridge, London appears as one of the world's great ports, with extensive docks and crowded shipping.

North London, mainly the dwelling place of the middle classes, is composed of Hackney, Islington and St. Pancras, while in Hampstead, St. Marylebone and Paddington are many squares of handsome houses.

London south of the Thames has none of the characteristics of the wealthy districts of the North. Poor quarters lie adjacent to the river from Battersea to Greenwich, merging southward into residential districts of the well-to-do class.

Plants Vary in Thirsts, Water Consuming Ability

Nature is very much of a spendthrift with water in carrying on her ordinary agricultural operations. To produce one pound of alfalfa hay 750 pounds of water are pumped through the plant. In order to raise a crop of this commodity the amount of water required would cover the ground to a depth of 20 inches. In more arid regions up to 30 inches of water is required to allow for the greater loss due to evaporation from the soil.

Irrigation engineers call the amount of water, in pounds, required to raise a pound of marketable crop, the transpiration ration. This is the amount of water which the plants take from the ground through their roots and pass through the stem of the plant to the leaves, where it is evaporated. Plants vary in their water requirements. Engineers of the Department of Agriculture have found that in areas where 20 inches of water are required to grow a five-ton crop of alfalfa to the acre, it takes 12 inches for corn or beets, 16 inches for potatoes and 9 inches for white beans. Plants vary in their thirsts, or in their water consuming capacity, very much in the fashion of human beings. In human beings the physiological drys and wets are determined by one of the factors of the pituitary gland.

Ruined Cities in Yucatan

Ruined cities abound in Yucatan, many of them buried in dense undergrowth for centuries, their history unknown, their hieroglyphics undeciphered. An almost unbroken line of these silent and deserted mementos of a vanished people stretches between Yucatan and the primeval forest beyond the Guatemala frontier. The predominant character of the important Maya structures is that they are built upon an artificial elevation, a pyramid or truncate cone supporting a building more or less vast. The walls are generally of great thickness, many are faced on the interior with carved stone and many also present a rich profusion of adornments, sculptured in bas-relief upon their faces.

100,000 Butterflies

The most enthusiastic butterfly hunter who ever lived, a Swiss named Hans Fruhstorfer, made a wonderful collection of 100,000 butterflies, and this has been lent to the Natural History museum in Paris. He began his collection in Brazil when he was twenty-two; then took his net to Java, where he spent three years; then he followed his pursuit for two years in the Malay archipelago. He traveled through South America, Japan, China and Siam, darting about with that abstracted look of the butterfly-hunter here, there and everywhere until he had brought his net over some of the rarest creations in the world. His 100,000 specimens have nearly 7,000 varieties.

"Troughs" Protect Trees

Boards fastened together in a trough-like manner may be seen around the trunks of carefully attended trees. These vertical "troughs" always are on the south side of the tree trunks. They are used only when the tree has been transplanted, to insure successful growth by protecting it from being blistered by the sun. When a large tree is moved, if the transplanter is not careful to reset it in the same direction in which it stood originally, the tree often will suffer from the effects of the sun's rays on the side which previously was sheltered. Experts who desire to take no chances frequently resort to the board protectors.

Snake Spits Poison

The snake which spits poison is the Egyptian spitting cobra. The mechanism of this spitting appears to be that by compression of the poison glands the venom is forced out through the fangs, and at the same time a blast of air is exhaled. This carries the liquid forward as a spray for a considerable distance, and if it strikes a person in the eyes, intense irritation is set up which results in temporary and sometimes permanent blindness.

Blow Snake or Adder Is Scrappy; Not Dangerous

On the Michigan pine plans is commonly found one of the most interesting reptiles in the United States, one with a habit which no other snake in this country (and few in the world) possesses. This snake, says Our Dumb Animals, is the commonly called blow snake or puff adder or, more rarely, called the spreading adder or hog-nosed snake.

It is a thick-bodied snake and is rather short, never measuring much more than two feet in length. When approached by an enemy it assumes the attitude of the deadly cobra of India and from the power of hissing sharply or spitting it gets its name blow snake of puff adder. It flattens its head until it is almost twice as wide and less than half as thick as normal. It will strike savagely but never quite hits the mark. It is entirely harmless, despite the stories of its poison breath. If it finds that it cannot bluff you by striking, and if you tap it lightly with a stick or with your boot, it will slowly turn over upon its back and relax with gaping jaws. It is to all appearances a dead reptile. Should you walk away it will twist its head about and, if all is quiet, it will quickly come to life and crawl to a place of safety. If you pick it up and turn it over it will repeat the "dying" process over and over a half dozen times.

Royal Clocks Valuable; There Are Many of Them

Windsor castle, says the Montreal Herald, has 360 clocks, Buckingham palace has more than 150. The inventory of the Windsor castle clocks alone fills two volumes in the Lord Chamberlain's office. The most valuable of them all is a small one that Henry VIII gave to Anne Boleyn on their wedding day. The weights are engraved with lovers' knots. It is said to be worth $50,000. Another valuable royal timepiece is a Louis XIV Buhl clock in the Van Dyck room at Windsor. It is said to be worth $25,000. There is also an Eighteenth century clock that requires winding only once a year. In the footmen's room at Windsor is a curious Act of Parliament clock. These timepieces sprang into existence when Pitt taxed watches, with the result that poor people ceased to carry them. Publicans came to their aid by installing Act of Parliament clocks in their windows. These clocks were of black-painted wood, with gilt numerals, and without glass over the dial.

The king's clock, however, is painted white. The largest of all the royal clocks is a grandfather, which stands in the grand corridor at Buckingham palace. It is 9 feet 10 inches in height

Roll Call in Congress

There is no requirement that the roll be called at the beginning of each day's session of congress. It is called at the opening of the term to ascertain whether all the states are represented, and a roll call is directed by the speaker of the house or the president of the senate before an action which requires a two-thirds vote. For the rest of the time, a roll call may be had whenever any member cares to raise the point of no quorum, if a substantial minority supports his request. It requires 35 minutes to call the roll in the house; in the senate, considerably less time. When a part of one of the bodies desires to delay proceedings for one reason or another, frequent and repeated roll calls help to accomplish the purpose.

First Iron Ship

The earliest use of iron in shipbuilding, either for the frame or sheathing, was in 1816 when Thomas Wilson, a Scotch boatbuilder, began the construction of the Vulcan in Lanarkshire, Scotland. It maintained a passenger service for over half a century and was the pioneer of the iron and steel merchant marine. The first iron ship in this country was the John Randolph, riveted together at Savannah in 1834 of plates shipped from England. The old gunboat Wolverine, formerly the Michigan, was launched in 1843 and is the oldest iron-hulled ship afloat in the world. The Great Eastern, used as a cable-laying ship, was of iron.

A King Was Cold

The judge's ermine and the mayor's fur collar are relics of the times when the temperatures of law courts and banqueting halls in England made them not an ornament but a necessity. Even at coronations it was hopeless to try to warm the Abbey, so the king and his august subjects were warmed instead, and modern sovereigns have cause to remember how chilly their ancestors felt when they in turn stifle under the same heavy fur robes. So cold were the homes of England that those who could afford it even slept in fur, and an old account book mentions the purchase of 17 skins to make a nightgown for Queen Elizabeth.

River's Phenomenal Leap

In British Guiana there is a mighty river called the Petara. At one place, Kaieteur, the river makes a clear drop of 822 feet, and at the foot of the cataract the waters of the Petara branch off in various directions. The Kaieteur cataract is the show place of British Guiana. Twenty-eight thousand cubic feet of water pass over the edge of the cataract every second. This vast volume of water, properly applied, would be capable of furnishing four times as much power as is derived today by the harnessing of Niagara falls.

Have you ever stopped to consider how our high school compares with other high schools as to extra curricular activities? Our high school has just as many extra curricular activities, in which almost every student may take part, as the larger schools.

Not many schools of our size can boast of all the following activities: baseball basketball, boys glee club, girls glee club, operettas, class plays declam, orchestra and band.

Due to the fact that we don't have the number of people to draw from for these activities that the larger schools have, many of our students are represented in several activities.

This means that if we are going to make a success of these different organizations and activities, that each person concerned must try doubly hard to cooperate and do his part. He should try to remember that failure to do his part will detract from the success of the whole group.

Let each person take it upon himself to do his very best in everything and to be dependable even though it may mean sacrificing other things we would like to be doing sometimes. —M. B.

WHAT WE DO IN OCCUPATIONS

Our small, but mighty, Occupations class has, for the past few days, been dicussing the question that enters the mind of almost every high school student, "Why Go to High School?"

Vella Paul has been imparting information daily this last week from the book by W. J. Little.

Mr. Little says the principal reasons why a person must go to high school are:

1. Because of the moral obligation involved.
2. It is necessary in the struggle to maintain our place in life.
3. It will pay in dollars and cents.
4. It will pay in Spiritual coin.

SHAMROCK BLARNEY

February 27 the first round of the state declamatory contest will be held at the Klemme High School Auditorium at 7:30 p. m. The towns represented at this contest are Belmond, Garner, Klemme and Goodell. Our speakers who will take part in the contest are those who took first place in the home contest. They are Franklin Kluckhohn, humorous; Delorys Cook, dramatic; and LaVonne Sherwood, oratorical. We are very proud of our speakers and are sure that they will do their best for Klemme High.

The Juniors, our prospective class of 1936, have picked their class rings which they claim are pretty "snitzy." The rings consist of a gold band containing a blue stone mounted with a gold crest with the letter "K" on top and the words High School underneath. The year is inscribed in a modernistic style with the "19" on one side of the stone and the "36" on the other side. The rings will be sent to them at the beginning of the next year of school.

IOWA VISITED BY SEVERE BLIZZARD SUNDAY

Highways And Side Roads Blocked By High Snow Drifts

Iowa's balmy spring-like weather came to a sudden halt Sunday when snow started to fall in the forenoon and high winds whipped it into a blizzard as severe as any we have had for several years.

Highways were blocked by early evening and most side roads were impassable. North and south highways were not blocked as bad as highways running east and west.

Many motorists were forced to abandon their cars and seek shelter for the night. A group of over thirty people, the Methodist Choir of Clear Lake, who had been at Algona to sing, did not reach their homes that night, but were forced to spend the night at the Clear Lake Country Club, near which place their cars stalled. A snow plow cleared the way for them to some to town the next morning.

Temperatures hit a low for February when the mercury went down to 9 below zero Tuesday morning.

STOKESBARY WINS SHAMROCK SCORING CROWN

Brinkman Was Close Second In Play During Season

Some of our readers have expressed a desire that we publish a report of the seasons record for the High School basketball teams. We have compiled the following table for those to whom it might be of interest. G stands for the number of games in which the player participated; fg, field goal; ft, free throw; mft, missed free throw; pf, personal foul; tf, technical foul; tp, total points. George Stokesbary, team captain, who graduates this year, had the highest average with 7.7 points per game and also played the cleanest game, as evidenced by the fact that in 15 games he was charged with only 11 fouls, an average of .7 foul per game.

This table does not include tournament games, and we will publish those totals at a later date.

Funeral Held Sunday For Former Klemme Woman

EXPLAIN RULING ON 1935 FORAGE CORN PLANTINGS

Land held out of corn production under the 1935 corn-hog contract may be planted to crops other than corn, unless such planting is contrary to the provisions of other commodity control contracts signed by the land owner, but such land may not be planted to corn for fodder or other forage purposes.

The AAA is convinced that further modification of the 1935 contract would endanger the purposes of the program, and would complicate compliance with the contract.

Such further modification is not regarded as necessary, in view of the flexibility of the contract and the modifications that already have been made. It is not favored by a large majority of the producers, although farmers in some areas, according to reports from the AAA, have been requesting authorization to plant corn for fodder in excess of the acreage permitted under their contracts.

As it stands, the corn-hog contract will permit signers to plant any acreage they desire to pasture, hay or feed-grain crops, except as may be contrary to other commodity contracts.

Under this broad privilege, contract signers may plant an adequate acreage to crops that mature early enough to help meet the temporary feed shortage resulting from the drought.

Corn would be of least value in meeting this temporary emergency because it matures later than any of the other major crops. Forage crops not only mature early, but in most cases produce a higher quality feed than fodder corn, involve less labor in production, and, if leguminous, are more beneficial to the land.

CHURCH LOYALTY CRUSADE IN FULL SWING

This week finds the state-wide Church loyalty crusade in full swing with 25,000 women workers at work in preparation for the first big Sunday, March 3rd, when every church member is asked to attend church.

Our leading statesmen, presidents justices of the supreme courts, and congressmen have been earnest religious men. Nearly all of them have been members of some church. The Loyalty Crusade calls us to grips with spiritual possibilities and realities. The principles of the Christian religion are the foundation of our American liberty.

The local Methodist church is anticipating a great day next Sunday, with not a vacant seat at the morning worship service. Thanks to the army of faithful women workers who are doing their part this week. If any member or friend of the church has not been visited, or has not received a program of the 8 weeks activities and other literature by next Sunday, please notify the pastor.

Next Sunday further announcements will be made concerning the Crusade and we will announce the goals toward which we are aiming in our own church. They are high, but we expect to reach every one and even pass some of them. Next Sunday is Roll Call Sunday. We want you to be present, you want to be present and God wants you present.

The Crusade is just starting. The crucial weeks are just ahead. Our opportunities are increasing. You need the church and the church needs you. Show your interest and loyalty by being present next Sunday morning.

GRANGES WILL ARRIVE IN U.S.A. SATURDAY

Paul Grange and his father, S. S. Grange, expect to arrive in New York Saturday of this week, and should arrive in Klemme the early part of next week.

OBITUARY—MRS. CHRISTINA HOSMER

Mrs. Christina Hosmer was born New Years Day in 1857 on a farm near White Rock, Illinois. She was the seventh of a family of nine children born to her parents, Sebastian Ell and his wife Catherine (nee) Weidemann.

Mrs. Hosmer attended the rural schools of her home community. She also learned to play the piano and learned to paint quite well in Oil colors.

At the age of 13 (this was in 1870) she migrated by wagon train with her parents and other relatives to Hancock County. They were among the first white settlers in Ell township and this township was named after her father, Sebastian Ell.

While working in Chicago, the deceased met Alonzo Hosmer. They were married and conducted a restaurant in that City for a number of years.

Later, she came back to Klemme and for a few years made her home with the G. W. Kluckhohn family, after which for about eight or ten years she was housekeeper for the Mallow family near Kamawha. For the last fifteen years she has owned and operated a Dry Goods section in a suburban store on the south edge of Mason City.

She was a member of the Olivet Methodist Church at Mason City. She was a regular attendent, enjoyed church work and most always taught a Sunday school class.

For the last few weeks her health has been bad, and pernicious anemia ended her life at the Park hospital in the early morning of February 21st. She had reached the age of 78 years, 1 month and 20 days.

Of the nine brothers and sisters in the Sebastian Ell family, four survive her. They are: Phillip Ell, Mason City; Mrs. Harry Smith, of Klemme; Mrs. G. W. Kluckhohn, of Klemme; George Ell of Belmond.

Funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Wm. Zabilka at 2 p. m. Sunday afternoon at the Methodist church in Klemme. Interment was made in the Klemme Cemetery.

J. C. THOMAS PURCHASED SHOP AT SCHALLER

J. C. Thomas came from Schaller Saturday night to spend the week end with his family here.

Mr. Thomas purchased a three chair barber shop at Schaller last week and took possession of the business last week Tuesday. The shop was formerly owned by A. L. Baker. Mr. Thomas employs two barbers in his shop and says there is but one other shop, a one-chair shop in Schaller.

Mr. Thomas says his new shop is modernly equipped and does a nice business. He expects to do some remodeling and re-decorating.

The Thomas family will remain in Klemme for a few months, or until school is out.

Federal authorities report a marked increase in the number of aged aliens who are applying for first naturalization papers They hope to be admitted to citizenship in order to be eligible for old age pensions under the proposed new law. It's great to be an American when Uncle Sam's purse is open.

Another shining example of consistency in bureaucratic activities is seen in the PWA, which is spending billions on various projects, some of questionable benefit. In a recent order employees were admonished to be careful not to waste lead pencils.

Louisiana Lottery Was Last, Greatest of Kind

The Louisiana Lottery was founded in 1868 and it was said it sold $28,000,000 worth of tickets annually and paid out approximately half that amount each year. It was the last and the greatest of the lotteries.

The main offices of the "Louisiana," as it was called, were in the center of the city of New Orleans, in a pretentious looking building with opaque windows. In the courtyard was a shallow fountain, and in the pool of the fountain was a huge live alligator, viewed by opponents of the lottery as emblematic of the scheme. They claimed children of ticket buyers might as well be thrown to the alligator, instead of being beggared, as they inevitably would be.

The monthly drawing of the "Louisiana" was described as highly picturesque. Streets were crowded with ticket vendors, brokers and interested investors. The actual drawing took place in the old French opera house, before boxes occupied by fashionably dressed women. On the stage, acting as masters of ceremony and distributors of lucky chances, were two "commissioners," both well known Confederate war heroes. It was said they received between $15,000 and $30,000 a year for presiding over the ceremonies. One sat in a chair and received the prize tubes from a blindfolded boy, at every twentieth prize closing the wheel, from which the drawings were made, for the periodical stirring up that was ostensibly designed to guard against fraud. The other "commissioner," more than six feet tall, had a "wheel of fortune" of his own, much larger than the other, over which he presided.

Animals and Birds Feel and Act as Human Beings

Instances to show that animals have largely the same feelings and emotions as human beings were cited by the director of the Taranga Park zoo, when he told how several members of a herd of elephants in Africa had been observed to go to the aid of a wounded comrade, and a wallaby to give assistance to another wallaby that was blind. As another example of the protective instinct in animals, says the Detroit News, a male kangaroo will take up the rear in retreat in order to draw the brunt of possible danger while the does and their young escape.

Birds, such as Sarus cranes, dance as we do for the fun of the thing, and they exhibit great thought in their gyrations. Cockatoos employ the sentry system, posting one bird as a lookout while others feed on the ground; the quality of leadership possessed by animals is evidenced in the V-shaped formation of wild geese while flying.

The variations in behavior encountered among different kinds of animals are attributed largely to environment. Animals act generally in the same way in given circumstances.

Cause of Tides

Tides are caused by the gravitational attraction, or pull, of the sun and moon on the water and on the earth itself. The close relation that the times of high water bear to the times of the moon's meridian passage shows that the moon's influence on tides is much greater than that of the sun; it has been estimated that it is two and one-half times as great. The result of this attraction of the moon is to draw or heap up the water, in the parts of the earth nearest it. The surface of the earth rises and falls twice in a lunar day of about 24 hours and 52 minutes. The tides do not always rise to the same height, but every fortnight, after the new and full moon, they become much higher than they were in the alternate weeks. These high tides are called spring tides and the low ones neap tides.

Santo Domingo Quaint City

Most ancient of existing settlements of white men in the western hemisphere is the quaint city of Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic. Christopher Columbus founded the city and claimed for Spain the island of Haiti, of which the Dominican Republic occupies about two-thirds. In Columbus' day the colony was named Hispaniola. One of the principal sights of Santo Domingo is the fortress wall and old gate leading into the city from the mouth of the Ozama river. The gate was heavily barricaded and the wall fortified in the early years of the city's history. Santo Domingo is capital of the republic.—Chicago Tribune.

Cork Used in Fabrics

One of the most unusual uses of cork is in the manufacture of certain fabrics in France. By using a specially constructed machine, thin pieces of cork are placed in chemical baths to remove the resinous parts which make the substance more or less brittle. After this has been removed the sheets may be folded and bent without breaking. By combining the cork sheets with any suitable cloth an excellent waterproof material may be obtained. The usual method is to glue the cork to the cloth.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Airplane Idea in 1640

The airplane and submarine were thought of in the middle of the Seventeenth century. This was declared by an official of the University of South Wales. He referred to a book written about 1640 by Lord Herbert Raglan. The title is "A Century of Invention," and the volume contains 100 suggestions, among them being ideas for airplanes and submarines.

FINDS BANKS WILLING, BORROWERS CAUTIOUS

Prominent Writer Refutes Statements Bankers Are Refusing Sound Loans — Describes Reasons for Reduced Volume of Credit.

FIGURES supplied by typical, well-managed banks in different parts of the country show that a high proportion of all applications for loans have been granted in the past year or two, says Albert W. Atwood in a recent article in The Saturday Evening Post on "The Idle Dollar." Excerpts from Mr. Atwood's article follow:

"Frequently banks state that as high as 90 per cent of all such applications are granted and for from 60 to 75 per cent of the amount asked for. Allowing that the bankers make these figures as favorable to their own case as possible, it seems strange that we are told again and again that banks are not lending at all.

"If we take into account the whole class of regular bank borrowers, the plain fact is very few want to borrow yet. For the word 'borrow' is merely another name for the word 'debt, and we face a great world-wide drive to get out of debt.

"An experienced small-city banker, asked if banks were lending freely enough, wisely replied: 'The really good borrower does not wish to borrow now. In fact, I think our customers are making a remarkably fine showing in paying off their loans, especially loans of long standing.'

The Shrinkage of Credit

"Or if we think of business concerns rather than of individuals, it is conservative to say that those able to maintain high credit ratings have been mostly the ones able to maintain ample cash resources and, therefore, least in need of credit. As prices and costs fell, many concerns found themselves with plenty of cash because of the shrinkage in operations. Cash resources were still further swollen by reduced dividends, and smaller inventories made bank borrowings still less necessary.

"Expressed in another way, banks cannot expand credit, they cannot make loans, unless there is a demand for the same. Fundamentally, the business transaction makes the loan, the loan does not make the transaction. It is a mistake to try to force upon business organizations funds which they do not need. Under the circumstances the 'idle dollar' is a natural and proper enough phenomenon. A demand for credit is difficult to create artificially, and there is always danger in so doing.

"Banks must be liquid enough at all times to pay depositors. The idea of a commercial loan is that it represents a self-liquidating process in business. If the banker makes only those advances that are inherently sound, and selects his maturities wisely, he will have incoming funds to meet demands.

Government Lending

"As everybody knows, the Government has vast lending agencies, for home owners, farmers, and the like. These have nothing to do with the subject of this article, except that all such Government operations would be impossible if the banks did not lend the Government money for the purpose.

"No one can set a time when borrowing will be resumed. But it will come when men once more feel that conditions are sufficiently settled to warrant them in taking chances, in entering upon deals, and in trying to make money."

Mr. Atwood says that it may be that the banks are overcautious now, just as they were overconfident in 1929, but calls attention to the fact that until a little more than a year ago banks were failing "partly because they had loaned too freely, and were being criticized right and left for precisely that fault." He adds:

"Indeed, the banks which had been cautious in their lending policy came through the crisis safely. Under such conditions it is utterly useless to criticize banks for not making loans After the experience they had for several years, especially in 1932 and 1933, it is only natural that they should relax their requirements very slowly and gradually.

"Unfortunately, many of the applications for loans are not from people who want temporary banking accommodation for three or six months and are quite able to meet their maturity dates, but are from those who really need permanent capital. They are busted and they want someone to stake them to a new start. What they really seek is a partner to furnish them with long-time capital. But depositors insist upon being paid on demand, and, therefore, it is a grave question whether banks should tie up their funds for any length of time."

HOW ONE FARMER HELPED HIMSELF

A farmer accustomed to keeping records found that it cost $16.50 to produce an acre of corn. His average yield was 33 bushels, selling for 50 cents per bushel. On this basis he was producing without either profit or loss.

A study of his costs indicated means by which the yields might be increased without proportional expenses. By making use of facts discovered at the Experiment Stations, the farmer secured an increased yield of four and one-half bushels per acre (37½ bushels, instead of 33). By increasing the yield and holding down expenses, this farmer was able to make a profit of six cents per bushel.

...when the heat comes, thousands leave New York. They have many places to go. The seashore bungalow colonies are little cities in themselves. There are other summer cities up in the mountains. In addition, there are hundreds of lakes. In fact, the state of New York offers just about every variety of scenery, except desert, that a vacation lover may desire. Since that is true within commuting distance, during the summer many New Yorkers merely toil in town and sleep and play away from ths lights of Broadway. But there are other thousands who cannot do that. For them, tha seashore is Coney Island, the mountains, the Palisades of New Jersey and the lakes more often than not, the basin of some fountain or maybe just a fireplug shower.

Those thousands, or rather I should say millions, do not live in sections of the city where there is some escape from the effects of the sun. Their dwellings are in the narrow streets of the tenement districts. Their homes are airless and oftentimes dark. For them, there is no escape from the heat. Nights, they crowd the roofs or the parks. Days, they get along as best they can. Often, mothers, to keep their babes from stifling, load them into perambulators and walk with them until the early morning hours afford some relief. It is wearisome, but babies must breathe. And after those all night rambles, the mothers do their housework and cook in kitchens some of which are equipped with coal or wood stoves.

Those street showers are beaches of the tenement youngsters. They shout happily under the cool spray and carry on much like we used to do when we walked out to the old Sycamore, peeled our clothes and enjoyed ourselves in the yellow Scioto. The youngsters of the slums can't go quite that far, however. But they go as far as they can, a single garment satisfying the conventions. Some, however, wear bathing suits. Asked a kid why he did and he replied, "Because it makes me feel like I'm out at Coney." And an old softy turned his head right quick!

Perhaps you've read about Ramon Million. I think the Recording Angel placed a gold mark opposite Ramon Million's name. The only money he has is his name because he's been out of work a long time. He came out of his home on One Hundred Eighth street and found a bunch of heat-exhausted kids trying to turn on a fire hydrant. They weren't strong enough so Ramon Million did it for them. He cooled off the kids. But he broke the law. While he still had the wrench in his hand, along came a radio car and Ramon Million was arrested.

In court, he made no attempt to deny his guilt. The magistrate was sympathetic and imposed a fine of only $2. Million didn't have even a nickel so he went to jail for two days. And I sincerely hope his cell was cool and comfortable—as cool and comfortable as he made those youngsters.

Speaking of hot weather, happened to notice two men high up on a scaffold cleaning the front of an apartment house. Usually this is done with a sand blast, a gritty, hard job. But in this instance, with the mercury well up toward the top of the tube, live steam was being used!

Maybe Society—Big S—isn't harking back to the Harry Lehr monkey party days, but right after the Astor-French show over at Newport, out at Syosset, L. I., there was a debutante party with a "milk bar" at which a genuine, tail-swishing, pail-upsetting Bossy was a feature. Also circus freaks helped enliven the occasion.

Dinner in Los Angeles; Lunch at World's Fair

Chicago.—Dinner in Los Angeles and lunch on the World's fair grounds in Chicago, is the record established by M. T. Donnelley and three members of his family recently. They flew in one of United Air Lines' three-mile-a-minute transports similar to the one exhibited in the dome of the Travel and Transport building at the fair.

Other air travelers are having lunch in New York and dining on the fair grounds.

Youthful Fisherman Uses Toy Sailboat as Bobber

Waltham, Mass.—Veteran fishermen can get a few pointers from Paul Milvill, eleven, on how to catch, not only the big ones, but a good many at a time. Paul uses a toy sail boat to which he attaches four lines with baited hooks. The boat goes out about 50 feet with the lines trolling behind and when the fish bite the hooks the boat bobs up and down. He then pulls in his fish.

STRONGER BUSINESS AND STRONGER BANKS

By F. M. LAW
President American Bankers Association

DURING the crisis when confidence was shattered, bankers were properly concerned in liquidity. Their main thought was to prepare to meet any demand for withdrawal of funds. They were more interested therefore in collecting loans than in making them. For this they cannot be justly blamed. It was a proper procedure.

F. M. LAW

Now that confidence has been so largely restored banks will naturally resume a more normal lending policy. This does not mean they will or should extend loose or unsound credit, but that the utmost good faith bankers will perform their proper part in recovery—a sympathetic and constructive attitude in the making of sound loans. ... should commercial banks make ... or long time loans, for the ... their loans are made from ... rived from deposits payable ... most part on demand.

When the return of confidence further on its way, business will find need for credit in many plans. Then good borrowers, who ... the most part have been so conspicuously absent from the market, will return. They will be warmly welcomed by the banks.

Business Men's Fears

Business men have not yet laid all their fears. They worry about what Congress may or may not do. They concern themselves about a trend toward control of business by government. They fear taxes beyond their power to pay. These are real sources of worry and when they are reassured along those lines they will be more inclined to take a fresh look at the future and to make plans to go forward.

As a matter of fact there are tangible evidences of recovery. The Federal Reserve Board officially has stated that prices, wages, business activity and production were back to the highest peak since early in 1931. Commercial failures in the United States are being cut almost in half as compared with the same period last year. It has been reported that the decline in export and import trade was definitely checked in the middle of 1933 and replaced during the last half of the year by a substantial recovery movement.

Among favorable factors is the improved condition of the banks. It is doubtless true that the banking structure of the country has never been in a sounder, stronger and more liquid condition than it is today. My authority for that statement is the Comptroller of the Currency. No longer is there any fear or thought of bank runs. Depositors once more know that their money is safe and the banker, thrice armed in the knowledge of his own strength, is looking forward.

Training for Bankers

The American Bankers Association has been active for many years training young men and women in order that they may be duly qualified for the business of banking. Standard courses are furnished with able and experienced teachers. This work is done under the direction of the American Institute of Banking Section of the association. Over two hundred chapters, or local banking schools, are in active operation throughout the country and thousands of the younger generation of bankers are being graduated each year. These students are taught not only banking practices and policies, but they are also well grounded in the highest ideals and standards of business ethics. A proposal is now under consideration to establish a central school, which will offer advanced or graduate work to a selective list taken from those who have completed the standard courses.—F. M. Law, President American Bankers Association.

Banks Repaying Loans From R. F. C.

Although banks and trust companies have been the largest borrowers from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, they have exceeded all other classes of borrowers in the rapidity of their repayments. Since the inception of the R. F. C. in February, 1932, loans have been authorized by it to 7,080 banking institutions in the amount of $1,995,000,000. Of this sum $442,000,000 was not taken by the borrowers, the actual advances being $1,553,000,000.

Repayments against these advances through April 30, 1934, aggregated $925,000,000, or about 60 per cent. The ratio of repayments for all classes of borrowers has been only about 37 per cent. These rapid repayments by the banks are taken by competent observers as a strong indication of returning normal financial and banking conditions.

Bankers Finance Scholarships

The American Bankers Association Foundation for Education in Economics has since its establishment in 1928, awarded 354 college loan scholarships, the total loans repaid in that period being $262,000 and the amount now outstanding $86,900. The total investments of its funds are $540,000.

ADJUSTING BANKING TO CHANGING NEEDS

By ROBERT V. FLEMING
Vice President American Bankers Association

BANKERS recognize that changing conditions require new methods of doing business. However it is their responsibility to retain those essential and sound financial principles upon which this country was founded and has grown to be what is still the richest nation in the world.

R. V. FLEMING

Many of our difficulties have arisen from lack of confidence and from misunderstanding. Therefore it behooves the banker to bend every effort to create a better public understanding of sound banking and thereby bring about that united effort ... cooperative spirit which will hasten the day of national recovery and ... give to the banker the confidence of the public to which he is entitled.

... an approach to the realization of this ideal, bankers should carefully ... tinise every application for a loan ... see if it is bankable and, if it is ... in bankable form, then make further examination to see if the loan can ... made so, in order that the uses of credit may be stimulated.

Explaining Loan Factors to Customers

We must not expect our customers to be bankers and understand all the factors which we must consider before granting a loan. If we find that a loan is not, and cannot be made, bankable, then I think we should take pains to explain to the applicant the reasons why it cannot be granted.

There are other measures which I think it important for the banker to undertake in order to eliminate the misunderstandings which have arisen and overcome the sentiment which exists. Under present conditions we have to operate under many laws and regulations, and also watch what further legislation is being proposed which affects our methods of operation and may not be in the best interest of the communities we serve. Nowadays it seems at times we must sit with a law book in one hand and a book of regulations in the other in order to make certain we are discharging our daily duties and functioning strictly in accordance with the law. All of this is very trying, yet I think in the end we shall become better bankers.

I believe it is the duty of every banker today to endeavor to understand the public he serves. In addition to his daily duties, trying as they are, he should participate in the activities of his community, so that, with the fund of information available to him, he may be as helpful as possible in all public and civic matters.

COMPTROLLER COMMENDS INSTITUTE OF BANKING

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The American Institute of Banking, said to be the most successful project of its kind in the field of applied adult education, has performed a valuable function in training bank clerks for "sound public service as well as personal success," J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, said here in a recent radio address. The institute is a section of the American Bankers Association.

"While imparting useful knowledge, it has improved the morale of banking personnel and has stimulated in its members an intelligent interest in national and international monetary problems," Mr. O'Connor said. "Its courses cover a wide field in banking. Among the subjects, one finds Bank Organization and Operation, Commercial Law, Negotiable Instruments Law, and Economics, in the Pre-Standard Division; followed by such subjects as Money and Banking, Credit Management, Financial Statement Analysis and Bank Management, in the Standard Division.

"Each and every subject is one which is necessary to a knowledge of banking. However, the institute does not stop here, but encourages graduate study in Corporation Finance, Trust Service, Farm Credit Administration and Business Forecasting. Again it emphasizes in special courses the importance of the less technical but highly beneficial study of Constructive Customer Relations, Banking Fundamentals and Public Speaking. No comment is necessary on these courses: their value is at once apparent."

BOOKLET ON FARM CREDIT

A booklet has been published by the Agricultural Commission, American Bankers Association, on "Factors Affecting Farm Credit," for the purpose of furthering on a national scale the taking of farm inventories and the making of credit statements as sponsored by the commission in cooperation with the state colleges of agriculture and the U. S. Department of Agriculture. The goal is better relationships between farmers and their banks.

The booklet is devoted to the types of loans generally required by farmers, the need for farm credit, how it can be obtained, when it is safe to borrow, what principles to follow to establish credit in advance of needs, and how both the lender and borrower are interested in sound, productive farm credit.

Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Quandt and Miss Marie Blank drove to Iowa City early Sunday morning to spend the day visiting with Gracka Quandt at the University. The day was fair and spring-like at Iowa City, but the Quandts encountered severe blizzards on the way home and their car stalled near Iowa Falls. Cars were sent out from Iowa Falls to give assistance to a number of motorists besides the Quandts and all had to spend the night at Iowa Falls.

A pale proud girl turned to the big, heavy-browed man, who was gazing intently at her. He held a glittering knife in his hand. "Have you no heart?" she asked in low even tones.

OAT AND CLOVER MIXTURE BEST ANNUAL PASTURE

A mixture of oats and clovers, with possibly some rape, probably offers the best emergency annual pasaure for 1935, suggest members of the Iowa State College Farm Crops Department.

Domestic rye grass may be used in place of the oats, and winter grain such as winter rye, planted in the spring provides a leafy acceptable pasture when used in such mixtures. Rape alone undoubtedly supplies the best annual hog or sheep pasture, while sudan grass, or even cane, or possibly some of the millets offer good mid-summer supplementary mixtures.

Oats and clovers seeded as early in the spring as the land can be worked may be expected to give a more satisfactory annual pasture than anything else that can be suggested.

The oats ought to be about 7 or 8 inches in height and ready to pasture shortly after the middle of May providing an abundance of good pasture until the oats begans to mature. Care should be exercised not to pasture too closely in late June and early July before the clovers become well established. The clovers will provide an abundance of excellent pasture until very late in the fall.

Except when the pasture is to be used for milk cows the department members suggest that the addition of a pound and a half of rape will return large dividends. The rape comes on rapidly and helps hold up the pasture as the small grain is maturing and before the clovers are at their best.

The clovers to be used, and proportion of each, will depend upon the character of the soil. If the soil is not acid, sweet cover can be expected to give the greatest amount of pasture. If the soil is inclined to be slightly acid, red clover should predominate with perhaps some sweet clover, while on soils distinctly acid the swee clover should be omitted and possibly some alsike added.

POTENTIAL WHEAT SURPLUS REMAINS AS CROP PROBLEM

Although reduction in the United States wheat surplus during the last two years through adjustment programs and drought has increased wheat prices, American wheat farmers still face the danger of surplus which may be produced in future years if all the available wheat acreage is planted.

This potential surplus danger is due principally to the limitations on export markets now available to American wheat producer. With average yields, all requirements for wheat in this country can be supplied from somewhere around 50 million seeded acres, and that normal yields from 56 to 58 million acres will supply both our home needs and all that can be sold abroad until there is a material improvement in the export situation.

Before there was a wheat adjustment program, wheat farmers in the United States had been planting an average of about 66 million acres to wheat. This acreage had furnished all the wheat needed in this country plus exports of from 200 million to 300 million bushels annually.

United States exports immediately after the War were two or three times what they were before the War because of reduced plantings in Europe. But, as European countries restored their wheat production, outlets for United States wheat declined until during the 1932-33 marketing year, net exports of wheat and flour from the United States amounted to only 32 million bushels.

LANDLORD WILL ALSO PROFIT FROM CORN-HOG CONTRACT

Share landlords have two definite benefits to secure from signing a corn-hog contract, Ben V. Greiman, county chairman said today.

One benefit is the immediate financial gain and the other is the possibility of improving the productivity of the farm through growth of more legumes or pasture and a better crop rotation system.

The corn-hog contract as drawn up this year is more attractive to landlords than last year. Landlords renting on a share basis will receive their portion of the benefit payment. Since there are no 'contracted acres' this year the landlord shares in the production of crops according to the usual agreement in the lease.

In his share of the benefit payment the landlord is guaranteed a certain income on the acreage shifted from corn to other crops regardless of yield or weather conditions. Benefit payments plus the income from crops grown on the land retired from corn may easily amount to more than if no corn-hog contract were signed.

In the case of cash rent, the benefit payments will make it easier for the tenant to pay his rent. This was especially true in many sections the past year where drought and insects reduced farm income.

The most important value of the program to a landlord, judged from a longtime viewpoint, is the possibility of improving the productivity of the soil. This may be done by putting legumes or other pasture or hay crops on the land shifted from corn and starting a good crop rotation.

FARMERS' UNION MET MONDAY

Monday, evening, March 4th, the Union organization of Liberty township held their meeting at the Liberty school house No. 7. In spite of the bad roads and wet weather a large number of members and visitors attended.

After the program an oyster stew was served by the committee.

The next meeting will be held on April 1 at Libtry school No. 7.

The Misses Norma Barz and Adella Schroeder served as waitresses for the first table and the Misses Ethl Barz and Stella Thieman were waitresses at the second table.

Special singing was provided during the dinner by a group of young people; and among the several songs were "Silver Haired Daddy," "When Your Hair Has Turned To Silver," "When You and I Were Young, Maggie" and "Home, Sweet Home." The singers were Ethel Barz, Stella Thieman, Adlla Schrodeer, Norma Barz, Ronald Barz, and Raymond Barz.

Talk Given By Pastor

After dinner a splendid talk was given by Rev. Grosshuesch and Mr. and Mrs. Barz were presented with a purse of silver from the guests. Mrs. Henry Barz responded with a short talk and the young people sang a number of songs.

In the evening all of the married cousins and their families came with well filled baskets and further celebrated the event. On Monday evening all of the younger people, neices, nephews, cousins, friends (all single) came to spend the evening and have a big party. There were sixty young people in this group and they enjoyed playing games. At exactly mid-night they burst into song, singing "Happy Birthday" in honor of Raymond's birthday as it was then Tuesday, March 5th and they presented him with a big birthday cake and proceeded to make merry once again.

Mock Wedding

The young people staged a mock wedding for the benefit of Mr. and Mrs. Barz and the following characters were taken: Ethel Barz, pianist Elsie Thieman, soloist; Dale Schlei bride; Alida Schubert, groom; Stella Thieman, bridesmaid; Mabel Schuldt best man; Ronald Barz, minister; Milvern Barz and Paul Schuldt, the flower girls; Earl Neuhring, veil carrier; Doris Barz, ring bearer; Norma Barz, mother; and Verner Priebe, father.

The group of young people dispursed at a late hour, all having had a fine time.

CHURCH LOYALTY CRUSADE GETS GOOD START

Last Sunday was Roll Call Sunday in thousands of Churches in Iowa in connection with the eight weeks state-wide United Church Loyalty Crusade. Encouraging reports come from every section of the state from co-operating churches. Large congregations greeted pastors everywhere. In spite of the factthat many country roads were impassable, the local Methodist church had almost 100 per cent increase in attendance at the morning service and the largest attendance at Sunday School and Epworth League there has been for many months. It is but a demonstration what can be done when we want to go to church.

Sunday morning the various goals were announced toward which we are working. While they may seem high, yet some were almost reached the very first Sunday. Let's reach at least one goal next Sunday.

Every Sunday until Easter will be a special Sunday, with special emphasis in both Sunday School and Church service on some phase of the Crusade. These special features differ in various churches according to local conditions.

Next Sunday at the Methodist Church, the morning service is especially planned for women. The entire center section of the Church will be reserved for women (girls of high school age and over). This will be another great service and every woman of our church and constituency should be present. Of course we want the men and children there also. Let's duplicate that fine showing of last Sunday and help move the church loyalty crusade along.

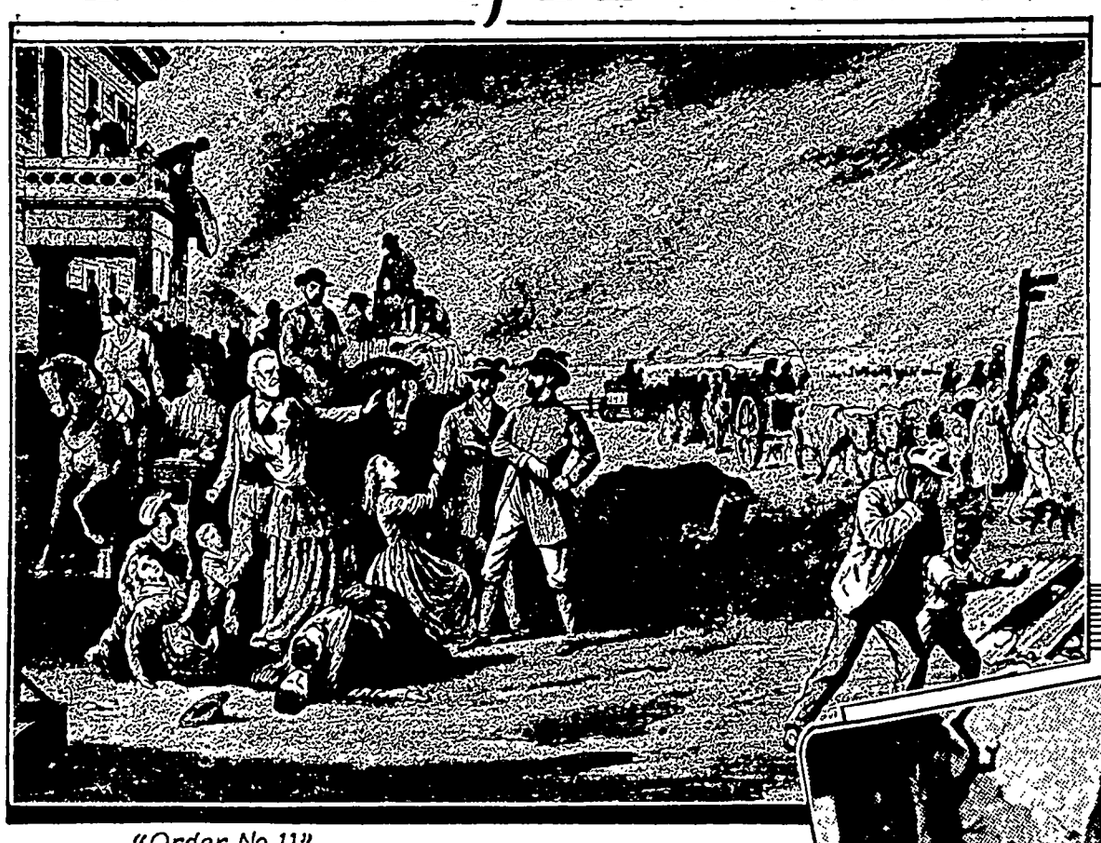
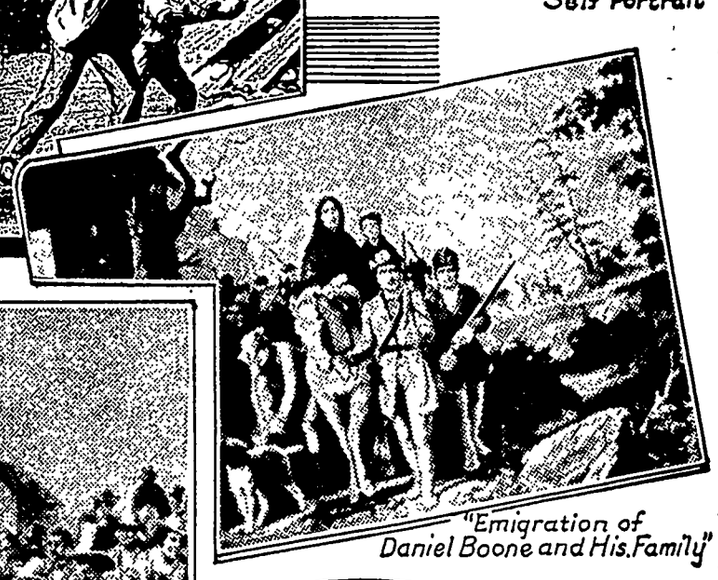
George Caleb Bingham, Painter of America's Past



"Order No. 11"

George Caleb Bingham—Self Portrait



"Emigration of Daniel Boone and His Family"

"The Stump Speech"

"The Jolly Flatboatmen"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FOR nearly a century he has been known as "the Missouri artist," a characterization which rather definitely limited the scope of his fame. During his lifetime he enjoyed a certain measure of recognition as one of the leading painters in the West. The American Art union chose several of his pictures for reproduction as colored lithographs and their wide circulation made his work familiar to most Americans. But because he never signed his paintings, the name of the man himself is comparatively unknown. Thousands who visited the Missouri exhibit in the Hall of States at A Century of Progress exposition in Chicago in 1933 saw for the first time an original of one of his most famous paintings and for the first time connected with it the name of George Caleb Bingham.

But a wider recognition, tardy though it has been, has come at last to "the Missouri artist." It started several years ago when a citizen of that state took an option on Bingham's home at Arrow Rock and suggested its purchase by the United Daughters of the Confederacy as a shrine to the Southern cause. Three years ago another Missourian, scion of a family intimately connected with the painter's career, declared that Bingham might well be called "Missouri's forgotten artist," for all the honor which it had paid him, and announced his intention of starting a movement to revive interest in the man and his work. In 1933 there was a loan show of Bingham paintings in the Kansas Art institute and last year the director of the St. Louis Art museum gathered from various parts of the country a representative group of his pictures which were on exhibition there for several weeks.

Another signal honor came last month when the Museum of Modern Art in New York city gave a show of Bingham's work. Time Magazine, featuring the story of this exhibition in its department on art, declared:

"Critics fell over themselves with such phrases as 'a modern Delacroix,' 'last of the Renaissance tradition,' 'rival of David and Ingres.' Only cautious bang-haired Royal Cortissoz sounded a note of doubt in the general acclaim for George Caleb Bingham: 'There is no distinction of style about his work. He was a mildly competent, mildly interesting practitioner, whose local legend may well be revived as a matter of pious courtesy.'

"Mildly competent his work may be, but the elaborate canvases of George Caleb Bingham described early life on the Mississippi and Missouri rivers far more ably than the much-touted Currier & Ives lithographs. Bingham was one of the few painters in the world who was a practicing politician all his life, and he remains today one of the few Missouri artists ever to gain national fame."

The paradox of his being both an artist and a practicing politician, however, is only one of the many interesting facts in his career. Bingham was born on a plantation in Augusta county, Virginia, March 20, 1811. When the boy was eight years old Henry Vest Bingham, his Scotch father, lost all his money, and moved his family of a wife, seven children and their grandfather to the little frontier town of Franklin in Howard county, Missouri. From his earliest years the boy dabbled with pencil and paint brush. He made his own paints, using axle grease, vegetable dyes, brick dust mixed with oil and even his own blood, obtained by cutting the ends of his fingers.

A year after the arrival of the Bingham family in Franklin a fortunate circumstance aided the boy's artistic ambition. Across the Missouri river at Boonslick Daniel Boone had settled and up the river from St. Louis came the artist, Chester Harding, to paint Boone's portrait. It is probable that the boy watched the painter at work, saw the likeness of the famous Kentucky pioneer grow on the canvas and view with envious wonder the finished product. It is more certain that Harding saw some of the sketches with which the boy had adorned the fence, the pump and the walls of the chicken house on his father's farm and gave him some much-needed encouragement.

When Bingham was twelve his father died and Mary Amend Bingham, the thrifty, resourceful German housewife, took her brood of children to a little farm in Saline county, the only thing left them after her husband's death. At the age of sixteen Bingham was apprenticed to a cabinetmaker in Boonville, learned something about wood carving and made wood panels on which he painted pictures. He also began the study of law in his spare time and even took up theology with the idea of possibly becoming a Methodist minister.

Fortunately for him and for American art, however, Chester Harding again came to Boonville, noted the progress the boy had made and strongly advised him to concentrate on a career as an artist. More than that, he gave young Bingham lessons and by the time he was nineteen he had definitely decided upon painting as his life work. Borrowing $100 from a friend he used it for more instruction by teachers in St. Louis. In 1838 he went East to study in the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and there his career began to blossom into full flower. He met many artists and had the opportunity of seeing many paintings. Not only did he see the portraits by such masters as Gilbert Stuart but he also saw descriptive or story pictures, technically known as genre painting, which appealed to him strongly and in which he began experimenting. He also continued his portrait painting and did pictures of all the celebrities he met—Andrew Jackson, John Quincy Adams, Van Buren, Calhoun, Buchanan and John Howard Payne, composer of "Home Sweet Home."

Returning to Missouri six years later Bingham started on his career as a genre painter. The fur-trading era was drawing to a close, as were other phases of frontier life, and America owes a debt of gratitude to George Caleb Bingham for preserving on canvas so much of it before it was gone forever. About this time he painted his first version of "The Jolly Flatboatmen" (there were several later versions), one of his best-known pictures.

The next thing to which the versatile Bingham turned his attention was politics. In a hotly contested election he won a seat in the Missouri legislature by three votes but his career as a law-maker does not seem to have interfered seriously with his painting. He continued to turn out scenes of life on the river and it was these paintings which first became widely known through the lithographs of the American Art union. One result of his political career in Missouri was to turn his attention to painting pictures of that phase of pioneer life, and in "The Stump Speaker," "Canvassing for a Vote," "County Election" and "The Verdict of the People" we have an invaluable record of the stirring days when people took their politics more seriously than they seem to do now.

By this time Bingham was making enough from his painting to enable him to go to Europe to study. After his return he painted some of his finest portraits. Later he made another trip abroad but this time his stay was a short one and in 1860 he was living in Kansas City and again taking a prominent part in the politics of the state. Despite his Virginia nativity and the strong Southern sympathy in Missouri, the outbreak of the Civil war found Bingham a stanch Northern sympathizer and a captain in the United States Volunteer reserves. So there is a paradox too in the proposal to make the Arrow Rock home of this Unionist a Confederate shrine.

But that proposal is more understandable if there is taken into account the fact that one of his pictures, the famous "Order No. 11," was a fierce polemic against an injustice suffered by the Confederates in Missouri at the hands of some of Bingham's fellow-Unionists. In 1863, while Bingham was state treasurer, Quantrill and his guerillas made their famous raid on Lawrence, Kan., and massacred many of its defenseless citizens.

In retaliation for this, Brig. Gen. Thomas Ewing, Jr., who was in command of the military district of the border with headquarters in Kansas City, issued his "General Order No. 11" calling for the concentration of all residents of the border into certain military centers and the delivery of their harvested crops there. Those who could prove their loyalty to the Union cause would be given permission to remain within the limits of the military stations but all "rebels" were to be driven out of the district. All of this had to be accomplished within 15 days.

It was one of the most drastic military orders ever issued during the Civil war. Bingham made a trip from Jefferson City to Kansas City and protested vehemently against its issuance. But Ewing was obdurate and the order was executed ruthlessly and in many cases with unnecessary brutality. Whereupon Bingham took a vow that "he would make the author of that order infamous to posterity with his pen and brush."

At the close of the war, Bingham moved to Independence and there began painting "Order No. 11." After it was finished he borrowed $5,000 from his friend, James S. Rollins, to have the painting engraved on steel. He had printed 5,000 copies which he sold and for many years after the Civil war these steel engravings hung in hundreds of Missouri homes to keep alive the hated memory of Thomas Ewing and his cruel "Order No. 11."

Ewing had returned to his home in Ohio after the war and in 1877 he was a candidate for governor. Whereupon Bingham went to Ohio, taking his painting with him and exhibiting it in all the larger cities. He gave lectures on it and wrote articles for the newspapers addressed to the voters, denouncing Ewing and calling upon them to keep such a man from becoming the chief executive of their state. The result was that Ewing was defeated. Bingham had kept his vow, although he did not live long to enjoy his triumph. He died in 1879 and is buried in the old Union cemetery in Kansas City.

The Gold Decision
Beheading Women
Murder With Germs
The Atom. Absolute Zero

The Supreme court upholds the President and congress in their legislative and executive action outlawing gold as money in the United States and invalidating "gold clauses" in private contracts.

Arthur Brisbane

The Supreme court's decision is all the more important and gratifying, because every American knows that no consideration outside the letter of the Constitution could have influenced Chief Justice Hughes or his associates.

The Supreme court decision disposes of the statement that President Roosevelt's administration has been proceeding "regardless of the Constitution." The decision will be reassuring to business and the public generally.

From every point of view the beheading of women by Mr. Hitler's government seems to have been a painfully disgusting performance. The women's hands were bound with steel chains—in fear, perhaps, that they might bite through strings or straps. The agile headsman, in full dress, cut off both heads in six minutes. The women were beheaded out of doors in the night, just before dawn, with floodlights for the headsman's work.

Witnesses of the killings praise the composure of the two women. Each walked to her death erect, wrists chained behind her, showing no sign of fear. An eyewitness said: "They set a good example to our men, whom we usually have to drag to the scaffold."

You have read about "war with germs" in the next great outburst.

India proves that it could be done. At Alipore two are condemned to death, convicted of "germ murder." As rich Amarendra Nath Pandey walked along the street he felt a sharp stab. He cried out. A germ poisoner had injected plague germs into his blood. Amarendra died. His murderers were his step-brother and his doctor. Two other doctors, accused, were acquitted.

A well-organized germ war could be disagreeable, distributing disease germs above great cities and in reservoirs from planes.

At Leyden, in Holland, scientists have produced a degree of cold said to approach within one five-thousandth of a degree of absolute zero.

A gigantic electro-magnet, in combination with liquid helium, produces the lowest temperature ever known on earth.

The lowest possible degree of cold, the absolute zero, would be minus 273 degrees centigrade, or minus 459.6 Fahrenheit. At least science thinks so. It used to call the atom "smallest fragment of matter."

Science needs "absolute zero" to help in tearing apart the atom, now known to be a miniature solar system.

Doctor Steinach of Vienna, whose business has been transplanting glands of lower animals to the bodies of men, to prolong youth and extend the years of possible parentage, announces now a "chemical substance" that makes transplanting glands unnecessary. The chemical, called progynon, possibly a compound of "progeny," is available for men or women.

The fact that a demand for it exists proves what fools there are, among men and women, seeking for more trouble, after kind nature has set them free.

Henry Ford views money philosophically as merely an abstract "indefinite, incoherent homogeneity," as Herbert Spencer might have called it. Mr. Cameron, broadcasting, mentioned casually the fact that Mr. Ford in one year lost $68,000,000.

When this writer asked Henry Ford what was the most money he had lost in any year while "changing type" and reorganizing, he replied: "I didn't lose any money. I only distributed some money."

It has been customary at executions in New Jersey state prison to admit relatives of a murdered man, that they may witness the killing of the murderer; very considerate, if relatives of one murdered really desire to see the murderer as he sits in the chair, straining against the straps and frothing behind the mask. It is safe to predict that Colonel Lindbergh will reject the invitation to see Hauptmann put to death for the kidnaping and murder of his child.

James A. Moffett, federal housing administrator, says the country is out of the depression but does not know it. In the West he "found business conditions definitely improved. Los Angeles alone has pledged $100,000,000 in new construction and modernization involving all types of buildings." San Francisco likewise has embarked on an ambitious building program.

Now if 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 idle Americans can get back to jobs, even though they may "not know it," all will be well.

And it allows plenty of room for romping—the skirt is gathered to the yoke at the back and box-pleated in front. A smart checked or plaid wool or cotton would be pretty for this frock—little girls always seem to love gay colors—and be sure to make up four or five of those crisp white collars in linen or pique. The bloomers, by the way, are included in this pattern.

Pattern 9086 may be ordered only in sizes 2, 4, 6, 8 and 10. Size 6 requires 2⅝ yards 36 inch fabric and ¼ yard contrasting.

CHINESE DINNER PARTY

An English woman living in Siam writes about a Chinese dinner. "Before the meal hot scented cloths were handed round on which the guests wiped their hands. No plates, knives, or forks were provided. The food was placed in a big dish in the middle of the table, and the guests helped themselves. For soup a china spoon and individual bowl were provided. Meat was taken out of the dish with chop-sticks. The following was the menu: (1) Crab meat and potato fritters; (2) shark's fin soup; (3) pigeon soup; (4) duck skin (the skin alone is roasted and eaten with a red sauce between bread); (5) pigeon's eggs stewed with mushrooms; (6) turtle soup with lotus seeds; (7) mushrooms stuffed with fish; (8) baked fish with ginger sauce; (9) rice with dried fish eggs, ginger, etc.; (10) rich custard, with fresh fruit and jelly; (11) China tea in bowls without milk or sugar.

"Hot scented cloths were again handed round, and this time they were much needed."

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Although it has been several weeks since the Supreme court of the United States rendered its history-making decision in the gold cases, there is no slackening in the disturbance from the effects of the administration's gold policies, even in the light of the court ruling. While the court held that congress had no power to enact legislation invalidating the gold clause in government bonds, it said in the same breath that collection from the government by a bond holder was another story. Since the government has taken gold out of circulation, collection appears virtually impossible but the appearance is not going to stop bond holders from seeking what they regard as justice.

Call It Repudiation

It is now apparent that the government's action is going to be regarded both here and abroad as repudiation. That is a nasty word when applied to governments and its repercussions likely will be heard for a good many years.

While the repudiation of the gold payments will affect comparatively few people directly, the significance of the action in a political way is becoming more and more apparent. The repudiation in its effect on the bond holders may be only temporary, but its effect politically will be far-flung.

I think it is generally considered now that the gold question will become a paramount issue in the next political campaign and it is not impossible that it will continue to be an issue over a period of years. This is so because, admittedly, actual damage has been done to American prestige in foreign lands. It is made to appear, therefore, that there will be a combination of international and domestic influences at work henceforth with respect to this government's gold policies.

Domestically, the issue was born in the presentation in congress of two bills designed to restore, partially at least, the status of this government as regards the gold policies to that obtaining before the devaluation of the dollar. Simultaneously, former President Herbert Hoover, in one of the few expressions made since retiring from office, declared his belief that the return of gold payments was necessary and vital to stabilizing conditions and re-establishing the United States in world favor.

Of course, with the abundant Democratic majority in congress, the gold bills will get nowhere very fast. Likewise, Mr. Hoover's expression can and will result only in providing ammunition for New Deal supporters, whose answer to criticism usually is a question whether it is desired to return to the conditions that caused the depression.

Nevertheless, I hear considerable discussion to the effect that these ripples must be considered as only the beginning. They will have the effect of causing many people to think about the problem. Discussions will take place in the homes and in the shops. There will be those who contend for sound money of the old style. Equally vehement defenders of the New Deal will arise. Thus, the issue becomes joined and it is not outside the realm of possibility that monetary questions will become as important in 1936 as they were in the Bryan free silver days.

Now as to the practical operation of the gold rulings:

Operation of Gold Rulings

There can be no doubt that the Constitution gives congress power to coin money and regulate its value. The Supreme court always has sustained this power. So, when congress, by resolution, allowed President Roosevelt to seize all of the gold in this country and hold it in the treasury, it accomplished indirectly that which it could not do directly. In this way it forced the invalidation of thousands of private contracts wherein one party promised to make payments in gold. Congress made such payments impossible and those who were to be paid have nothing left but disillusionment. As to the gold payment clause in the government bonds the Supreme court said that congress had no right to enact legislation the effect of which was to void that payment. It would seem, therefore, that some way should be found to force the government to make good. That way lies only through the Court of Claims of the United States, and when that court is denied jurisdiction in suits to recover, the bond holder is left with a right, but that right is unenforceable since the government can be sued only with its permission.

On top of these circumstances, and as a long range proposition, considerable attention has been directed to the relationship between the gold clause decisions and inflation. There is a direct link. This link, without doubt, should be watched by all of those who think of the future of this nation.

Inflation of the credit has been going on continuously since Mr. Roosevelt took office. The federal government has set no limit to the borrowing which it will undertake in its program for recovery. The Supreme court has said directly that government securities are worth whatever the administration and congress determine them to be worth because the dollar can be valued up or down as circumstances warrant.

But the value which the President and congress place upon the dollar may differ materially from the value which the public places upon the currency. The public will view the dollar in terms of its purchasing power. Public confidence in the currency, therefore, becomes an absolute necessity and once it is shaken, if history means anything, it takes a long hard pull to get it back. So, if congress shows a willingness to repudiate obligations as it has shown already, the public sooner or later begins to wonder what the end will be.

Throughout history, wherever and whenever such a condition has arisen, the public seeks to convert this doubtful currency into material things, those of a utilitarian value, which it may use. Money, being inedible, is sought to be exchanged for things to eat, to wear, to sustain life and comfort. This is what is meant in expressions "the flight from the dollars," or "the flight" from any other currency about which we have heard so much since the World war.

Up to the President

The situation in congress in the last few weeks has provided a test for President Roosevelt's political acumen. It has been far more a test of his skill than otherwise would have been the case because for almost two years he has had a congress so obedient to his command as to merit the description of a rubber stamp legislative body. Now, however, the President is faced with the necessity for political maneuvers of the highest order and upon the results of his tactics much will depend. He can cement the links of the Democratic party or he can cause them to disintegrate by the courses he follows.

Some curiosity has been aroused by the fact that for the first time since he became President, Mr. Roosevelt omitted in several instances lately to send administration drafts of bills for congressional consideration. His practice hitherto had been to have the bills drafted in executive departments and submitted with a recommendation that they be enacted in that form. Until some of the factions in congress began to feel their oats this plan worked very well. A change has come over some of them, however, and they are now insisting upon preparation of the legislation themselves.

Another significant development—and this links to circumstances of several months ago—was the presentation by Senator Wagner of New York of a bill to settle labor disputes. This bill does not have administration approval. Indeed, it is quite contrary in some of its phases to the policies which Mr. Roosevelt has sponsored in his dealings with organized labor. It seems important, therefore, that Senator Wagner, who for so long was regarded as Mr. Roosevelt's alter ego in the senate, should deliberately offer legislation to which the administration had not agreed. With further reference to Senator Wagner, who comes from the President's home state of New York, it is interesting, even if unimportant, that Senator Wagner did not support the President in the latter's efforts to force the $5,000,000,000 work relief bill through the senate. Since Senator Wagner has been consistently a New Dealer many observers are asking with some logic whether the New Deal supporters have begun to crack up.

Extension of NRA

It will be recalled that in asking for an extension of the national industrial recovery act for a period of two years, President Roosevelt merely outlined in his message the fundamentals of the plan he was recommending. He carefully avoided reference to any draft of such a bill. It occasioned some surprise that this was so but closer analysis of the situation should have developed reasons therefor. Most of these reasons are traceable directly to the circumstances I mentioned above, namely, the necessity for tactical skill in maneuvering the political strength available to the President.

Observers here generally are agreed that Mr. Roosevelt can turn on full steam and hold a powerful majority in both house and senate. But, the question is whether this is the wiser course from a political standpoint. In this connection the expression has been heard several times lately among Democrats who have been regarded as among the leaders that it might not be well to prod stubborn mules too far.

The best information I can gather is that while Mr. Roosevelt did not offer a draft of NRA extension legislation, a bill will be forthcoming in a couple of weeks from the senate finance committee that will have had prior approval from the White House. Something of the same course is scheduled for the house side. Thus, the picture becomes complete. The fine Italian hand of the administration comes into view.

The story we get around Washington is that this course of action will be used more and more as a means of avoiding open disputes and stubbornness on the floors of the house and senate.

Great English Jurist Who Conceived "Utopia" to Be Canonized, Vatican Reports

Sir Thomas More, the author of the Utopia, is to become Saint Thomas. This news from the Vatican is of extraordinary interest because the world is now discussing various schemes to bring about Utopian conditions and the word, "Utopia," is on every tongue.

The word was used by him in describing the institutions and customs on an imaginary island of Utopia (nowhere), the capital of which, Amaurote (the dim city) was situated on the River Anyder (waterless) and had as its chief magistrate an ademus (one without a people). It pretended to be an account by Hythloday, who had accompanied Amerigo Vespucci on a voyage to the New world, and it represented Utopia as being a place similar to the ideal state of Plato. Before telling of the perfect life on the unknown isle Hythloday spoke at length and critically of the severity of the laws of England and the injustices of its system of government. It was written in Latin in the year 1515 and issued at Louvain, though not published in England either in Latin or English until long after More's death.

The author of the Utopia, many people may be surprised to know, was the lord chancellor of England, an office corresponding in judicial eminence to that of the chief justice of the United States Supreme court, and it is apparently because he refused to recognize the legality of the divorce of Henry VIII from Catherine and his marriage to Anne Boleyn, and was beheaded, that he is to be canonized as a saint, although, of course, his character entered into the consideration. At the age of twelve, he was placed in the household of Cardinal Morton, archbishop of Canterbury, and at once made a great impression on his patron. A few years later he was sent to one of the colleges of Oxford, where he became known as one of the foremost champions of "The New Learning." After withdrawing from the college to study law he met the great Dutch scholar Erasmus and a warm friendship developed between them. In 1515 he was sent by the king on a mission to Flanders, where the second half of the Utopia was written.

Steadily he rose to be, next to the king, "the highest officer in this whole realm." Failing to obtain a divorce or annulment of his marriage, King Henry deprived Wolsey of his position as chancellor and appointed More his successor, but when the subject was broached to him, the new chancellor expressed regret that his conscience would not permit him to serve the monarch's pleasure in the matter, and he soon retired to private life. Still the king had great affection for More, and it was only when he refused to attend the coronation of Anne that this apparent friendship turned to enmity. For refusing to take an oath that Henry's first marriage was invalid and his second valid, the former chancellor was sent to the Tower, and on July 6, 1535, he was beheaded. Lord Campbell, one of his successors in the chancellorship, termed the execution "the blackest crime that has ever been perpetrated in England under the form of law." Addison said: "His death was of a piece with his life. There was nothing in it new, forced or affected. He did not look upon the severing of his head from his body as a circumstance that ought to produce any change in the disposition of his mind; and as he died under a fixed and settled hope of immortality, he thought any unusual degree of sorrow and concern improper on such an occasion as had nothing in it which could deject or terrify him."

No Utopia has yet been found and it does not seem likely that any will be. But the world would be nearer perfection than it is if men who resembled the author of this work in brilliance of mind and in nobility of character were more numerous. And there is little to be said in favor of a monarchy or political regime that could commit the crime of beheading a great counsellor and jurist for such a cause.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Slight Concession

Mrs. R. was quite active in affairs at the grade school which her boys attended. The youngest, ten, had requested her presence at the assembly period where he expected to shine forth for the first time as drummer in the program to be given by the orchestra. Before leaving the house, however, he gave his mother her final instructions:

"Now, mother, when you come to school this morning, don't kiss me or pat me or anything!"

"May I speak to you?" asked his mother suppressing a smile.

"Oh, yes, I guess that'll be all right."—Exchange.

Old Ideas Reversed?

The common belief is that the terms "clinging vine" and "sturdy oak" are no longer applicable to the male and female species of the human race. It has occurred to us that perhaps they are still applicable but in reverse order to the old custom.

All the women employees of this office were on the job before eight o'clock when the mercury was below zero Monday morning, but several of the men couldn't get here until later because they couldn't find a way to ride down.—Chanute Tribune.

A Law Every Mother Should Know and Observe

Never Give Your Child An Unknown Remedy without Asking Your Doctor First

According to any doctor you ask, the only safe way is never to give your child a remedy you don't know all about, without asking him first.

When it comes to "milk of magnesia," that you know everywhere, for over 60 years, doctors have said "PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia for your child."

So—always say Phillips' when you buy. And, for your own peace of mind, see that your child gets this; the finest men know.

Safety for You and Yours

You can assist others by refusing to accept a substitute for the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Do this in the interest of yourself and your children—and in the interest of the public in general.

EDITORIAL

The raging monster War is again showing his teeth above the horizon gradually destroying with his poisonous breath our Goddess of Peace and Happiness. Are we stand by trembling with fear and apprehension while this goes on? We have no Beowulf or knight as of old to destroy this monster for us. There must be then another way; and there is. By cooperation and understanding between the nations of the world a catastrophe can be avoided. A friendly relationship that all civilized people of the world should strive for so that War shall be forced forever into the background and our fair Goddess of Peace and Happiness placed back on its pedestal where it belongs.—B. What Would You Like To Do Most After Finishing High School?

I think I'll become a farmer! With no more English Literature or Physics on my mind I'll just roll up my sleeves, pull the old straw hat down and concentrate on Henry Wallace and the corn-hog program.. When my mind isn't occupied with such "minor things," I'll think of more important things such as my old T Ford, commonly called "Calpurnica" or "Horatius." And if the worst comes to the worst, I'll saw off a leg and sell shoestrings or what have you. but time is flying so I shall cease and go back to my literature and my physics.—Melvin Schlei.

It has always been our pet ambition after finishing high school to go forth and see the world. After spending so many years between the pages of text books we think that such a plan would be perfect. To feast our eyes upon the scenes which have adorned the pages of geography books, marvel at the wonders of science which are but introduced to us in our Physics and Science texts and to meet those of a different race or nationality; study their ways of living and to contrast them and their country with our own would indeed be an education in itself and so we say "Here's hoping." —Guess Who?

This great world has a large line of work to choose from. In all lines of work a good education is essential. This education requires college work besides your high school. I haven't as yet definitely decided on the course I want to take up but my one and only aim is to attend a college of good standing. I sincerely hope my only aim is headed in a right and successful direction.—Alida Schubert.

My pet ambition after finishing high school is at times very elaborate, but I'd like to continue with beauty work and strive for a higher most. My uppermost ambition is to someday teach in a Beauty School.—Vella Paul.

After I get out of high school I am going to join a baseball camp where you get ready for professional baseball. I want to be a baseball player because it is not such hard labor and the working hours are not so long. I am going to play in right field and when I'm at the plate I'm going to plow 'em out of the lot like Babe Ruth himself.—Elmer Jensen.

When I finish high school I'm sure there will be plenty for me to do. The things I enjoy doing most are cooking and sewing. I hope that someday I can sit down and sew to my heart's content. I would sew everything that I might possibly desire. I also like to cook because it seems that one can get a lot of satisfaction and pride out of sitting down to a table of delicious food that you have yourself prepared. I hope also to broaden my knowledge in these two fields and I am sure that they will bring me much happiness.—Lida Griffen.

Nickname of "Bomba" Was Given to Ferdinand II

Ferdinand II, by the grace of God, king of the two Sicilies, Jerusalem, etc., duke of Parma, Placenza, etc., Hereditary, etc., etc., for all his resounding titles was one of the most thoroughly hated of the petty kings and princes who ruled the various independent states which were joined together in the early '60s to form the present kingdom of Italy, writes R. A. Barry, in the New York Herald Tribune.

The two Sicilies, the island of that name and the neighboring southern portion of the Italian mainland with Naples as its capital, had existed as a dual kingdom from the days of the Crusades, subject at different times to Norman, Austrian or Spanish dominion. The kingdom had, after the Napoleonic wars, been reassigned to the younger branch of the Spanish Bourbons, and it was under the misrule of these reactionaries that the Sicilies passed their final years as a separate kingdom.

Once, in 1847, a rebellion broke out on the Island of Sicily and for a time appeared to be succeeding, for Ferdinand granted a constitution, but he soon regained the upper hand and by wholesale treason trials soon had every important citizen who had any part in the rebellion either in exile or in jail.

During the rebellion, he had vindictively ordered the bombardment of the defenseless cities of Messina and Palermo, which act earned him the derisive nickname "Bomba" and, although his stern and repressive measures had thoroughly quelled the spirit of revolt and instilled a feeling akin to terror in the people, he could not recall the name and under it he was loathed and hated to the end of his reign.

Moon Is Blamed for Many Impossible Afflictions

The idea that the moon upsets wireless programs would be more in keeping with its old reputation than the discovery of its usefulness to fishermen. For most of the things our ancestors believed about the moon were pretty unpleasant, says Answers Magazine.

They thought, for instance, that to sleep in the moon's rays was to invite blindness or other troubles, and coined the word "moonstruck" to describe those who were mentally deranged. "Lunatic" also comes from the Latin word meaning moon.

And while they also believed in the moon's influence on fish, their view was much more pessimistic than that of the fisheries experts. They thought that at certain times the moon made fish unfit for food.

The moon, in short, was regarded with a good deal of suspicion. Perhaps this was partly due to its association with black magic and paganism. The witches believed that the herbs which they used in their incantations, or from which they brewed poisons to kill their enemies, had to be gathered while the moonbeams fell on them.

Florence Nightingale

One of the world's greatest statisticians, says Doctor Walker, was Florence Nightingale. Few people realized that the Lady of the Lamp started her nursing career by pestering the British admiralty with facts and figures in carefully planned graphs of needless death and suffering on the battlefield. Without her statistical ability the world might never have learned of the angel of mercy. In her day she was called "the passionate statistician." She became thoroughly hated by the government before she was given the opportunity to become universally beloved.

Tears Kill Germs

Science rises impersonally to defend tears, and says of them: Tears kill germs. The secret of tears seems to be a chemical of the class called "enzymes," like the pepsin which aids digestion in the stomach by splitting some of the complicated substances of meat into simple chemicals, which the body can absorb. A new "enzyme" in tears, reported by Dr. Karl Meyer, Prof. Richard Thompson and two associates in the department of opthalmology at Columbia university, seems to have a similar power to split up and dissolve the sticky, gumlike substances in mucus secretions.

Neat Ship Surgery

A neat trick in ship surgery was done by England during the war, two of its destroyers of the same class—the Zulu and the Nubian—bumped into mines and were damaged beyond repair, the former losing her bow and the latter her stern. So they were cut in half and the good bow of the Nubian was welded to the good stern of the Zulu, and the "new" ship was named Zubian. —F. T. Bell, Glenside, Penn., in Collier's Weekly.

Where Iodine Comes From

About 90 per cent of the world's iodine is produced by Chile. This drug is a by-product of the nitrate industry. Twenty years ago Chile supplied 75 per cent of the total volume of nitrogenous fertilizers to the whole world, but because of synthetic processes carried on in the United States and Europe, this proportion has shrunk to 15 per cent.

ADMINISTRATION FORCES IN DEADLOCK WITH LABOR ON WORK RELIEF BILL.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

DETERMINED not to accept the McCarran-Federation of Labor prevailing wage amendment, the administration forces in the senate sent the work relief bill back to the committee. What will happen now to the President's big program is problematical. Senator Byrnes of South Carolina, one of the administration men, declared the measure had met its death.

Senator Huey Long

Insisting he was expressing his own belief and not talking for the President, Byrnes said, "There is no prospect" of reviving the works program and "The committee probably will do nothing about it."

"The President stated that if the McCarran amendment were adopted he would not sign the bill," Byrnes said. "The senate adopted it, therefore, so as far as the works part is concerned, the bill is gone."

He expressed the thought the committee would report out an appropriation of $880,000,000 or $1,880,000,000 to carry out the present relief program for six months or a year.

The general opinion in Washington seemed to be that the latter part of Byrnes' statement was correct, and that the committee would delay reporting the public works part of the bill until the states and municipalities which would largely benefit from it could bring pressure to bear on their senators.

Adoption of the McCarran amendment by the senate was brought about only after a hard fight and by means of a rather tricky shifting of pairs in which Huey Long took a leading part. It won by a margin of one vote, whereupon Senator Robinson, Democratic leader, moved that the bill be sent back to the committee. This was done, Senator Glass expressing the hope that the committee would report out a bill "that will not be quite so controversial."

Senator Long, who loses no opportunity to pester the administration and to display his political shrewdness, has started a movement for the specification of $2,500,000,000 of the work relief measure's total for the purpose of highway construction. Highway commissions in every state were asked by him to indorse this plan. Long said he had discussed it with some other senators and that they liked it.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT paid a short visit to his home in Hyde Park, N. Y., and from there went to New England, especially to see his son, Franklin, Jr., initiated into the exclusive Harvard Fly club at Harvard university. In order that he might keep in close touch with Washington, one of his secretaries, Mr. McIntyre, maintained an office at Poughkeepsie, near Hyde Park, and another, Mr. Early, remained at the White House.

It was understood that during the trip the President was preparing a message to congress recommending that the present government policy of ocean mail contracts be supplanted by direct subsidy grants to American steamship lines. His decision in favor of this quite radical change has been influenced by the report of a committee of experts that has been studying the question. Probably the proposition will meet with opposition from many congressmen and senators who are not from seaboard states.

FEDERAL JUDGE W. I. GRUBB of Alabama gave the New Deal a sharp rap that threatens the great electric power development in the Tennessee valley. He ruled that the Tennessee Valley Authority has no legal authority to dispose of surplus power generated at hydro-electric plants on the Tennessee river. The administration is depending on this enterprise to bring about the lowering of private power plant rates, and it was believed there would be an immediate appeal from the decision.

In Washington especial note was taken of the fact that Judge Grubb made permanent an injunction restraining 14 north Alabama cities and towns from negotiating with the Public Works administration for loans to build electric distribution systems. There was speculation as to what effect, if any, this might have nationally on PWA's policy of giving financial encouragement to municipal power developments.

CELEBRATING the seventeenth anniversary of the establishment of its army of 960,000 men, Soviet Russia renewed its defiance of "imperialistic" nations. All over the country there were fetes, and the speakers took occasion not only to glorify the Red warriors but also to attack Germany and Japan. Karl Radek, one of the chief spokesmen for the Soviet government, wrote in Izvestia:

"We cannot fold our hands when we know that the imperialists plan to attack us. Raging imperialistic cliques to the east and west of us are openly proclaiming programs of war against us."

In connection with the celebration figures were published showing that, in addition to the army, there are 13,000,000 civilians who are now members of a nation-wide organization for chemical and air defense; 3,000,000 volunteer automobile drivers; 720,000 expert civilian marksmen, and nearly half a million trained parachute jumpers as well as tens of thousands of glider pilots.

MUSSOLINI has sent 5,000 more Italian troops to east Africa, making 10,000 that have been dispatched for the possible war with the empire of Ethiopia. With the latest contingent went Gen. Rudolfo Graziani, who will be in command of the expeditionary army. The soldiers were given a fine send-off at Naples, Crown Prince Humbert being present.

A spokesman for the government said the negotiations with Emperor Haile Selassie were progressing slowly and very badly, and he was pessimistic as to the outcome. Cynical observers of the proceedings do not believe Mussolini is especially eager to avoid conflict with Ethiopia. Pointing to the well-known fact that Italy wishes to expand its territory to accommodate its people, they predict a movement comparable to that of Japan in Manchuria, justified by much the same arguments used by the Japanese.

POSSIBILITIES of a merger of Democrats with Republicans in fighting for repeal of the "pink slip" or income tax publicity section of the 1934 revenue act was seen as Representative Bell, Missouri, pleaded for immediate passage of his bill eliminating the publicity provision.

"Not only is there fear on the part of the people of the country on account of gangsters and racketeers," Bell asserted "but there also is concern among business men, because their competitors will have the opportunity of nosing into their secret files.

Bell added that his bill would leave intact the features of the 1926 revenue act which permitted house and senate committees or any government official, upon order of the President, to have a copy of any income tax return that might be filed.

A statement from Raymond Pitcairn, national chairman of the Sentinels of the Republic, called upon all income tax payers to withhold filing their returns until March 15, to give Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and revenue department officials time to appear before congressional committees, and to give congress an opportunity to repeal the law. Pitcairn also challenged Senator LaFollette, sponsor of the income publicity move, to a national radio debate. LaFollette ignored the challenge.

VICTOR A. CHRISTGAU, demoted from his position of second ranking officer of the AAA in the recent shake-up which involved several alleged radicals, resigned in protest. Chester C. Davis, administrator, had not accepted the resignation and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace was attempting to persuade Christgau to change his mind.

Wallace hinted that there had been differences between Christgau and A. H. Lauterbach, chief of the AAA dairy section, over the milk policy. A protege of Undersecretary Rexford Guy Tugwell, Christgau was also supposed to have encountered "friction" with other members of the department. This gave rise to new rumors that Brain Truster Tugwell will resign before his influence in the AAA is too severely curtailed by the demotion and ouster of his confreres.

Secretary Wallace

Meanwhile amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment act were declared to conceal dangerous, arbitrary and autocratic powers over farmers, manufacturers and distributors of farm products, by the legislative committee of the agricultural industries conference in Washington. The committee cited the provision that the AAA may require that a licensed processor purchase only from those who sign contracts. It charges that the amendments make no provision for the farmer to express himself in the matter of licenses, but contain provisions for price control, markets, production and purchasing. Through indirect restriction of the farmer's market, these provisions are equivalent to a licensing of the farmer, according to the committee. "The entire economic life of communities could be directed from Washington," the committee said.

DR. F. E. TOWNSEND of California, whose pension plan for the aged has gained the support of many thousands of thoughtless citizens, went before the senate finance committee and tried to explain how the government could get out of its economic troubles by paying $200 monthly pensions to all persons over sixty, provided each one must spend his $200 for commodities or services within the country each month. The senators didn't treat the proposition with much seriousness.

BREAKING the tenth commandment is breaking the law in England. Alexander Frederick Churchill Sim of Cookham Dean, Berkshire, coveted the "perfect" serving maid of his neighbor, Herbert Mercer Stretch, and enticed her away from him. For this the civil court fined Sim $125. It assessed him another $1,250 for asserting in a telegram that Stretch borrowed money from the maid, Edith Saville.

BRUNO RICHARD HAUPTMANN escaped the electric chair at least temporarily when a writ of error filed by defense attorneys earned him a stay of the execution sentence which was to be carried out at Trenton, N. J., March 18. The Bronx carpenter's life is safe at least until September or October, since a further appeal can be made to the court of pardons if the court of errors and appeals fails to uphold the writ. Lloyd C. Fisher and Frederick A. Pope presented the appeal after a battle with Chief Defense Counsel Edward J. Reilly, who subsequently threatened that either he or Fisher would have to withdraw from the Hauptmann defense. The hearing will probably take place at the next session of the court, which beigns May 21.

ON THE heels of the Supreme court's gold ruling, former President Herbert Hoover demanded reestablishment of the gold standard in the United States as the only way "to restore confidence in our currency." This could only be done by making the dollar immediately convertible at the present 59 cents of gold—the modern method of specie paying.

Herbert Hoover

The only living ex-President said that such action would put more of the 12,000,000 unemployed men back to work than any other step. The United States should take the lead in returning to the standard, he said, declaring that, "There is no need to wait on foreign nations before we re-establish the gold standard and restore confidence in our currency. They would be bound to follow some time. They are more afraid of our doing just this than they are of any American 'managed currency.'"

TWO more years of the NRA, with clarification of policies, more effective enforcement of codes and the granting of "unquestioned power" to the federal government, were urged by the President in a message to congress.

The national recovery act terminates June 16 this year. "Abandonment would be unthinkable," he said, naming the act as "the biggest factor in giving re-employment to approximately 4,000,000 people."

He said congress must maintain the fundamental principles of the act to establish at least a minimum fair trade practice and labor relations standard, pleading that child labor must stay out and that fixing of wages and hours was practical and necessary.

Answering recent protests of labor, he said: "The rights of employees freely to organize for the purpose of collective bargaining should be fully protected."

He urged more strict application of anti-trust laws, condemned monopolies and private price fixing, opposed hindrances to fair competition, and proposed further protection of small enterprises against discrimination and oppression.

His suggestions, if adopted, would keep code violators from behind the bars. "The way to enforce laws, codes and regulations relating to industrial practices is not to seek to put people in jail," he said.

Admitting some mistakes, the President was well satisfied that the NRA had done a good job considering its short existence.

"Only carping critics and those who seek political advantage and the right again to indulge in unfair practices or exploitation of labor or consumers deliberately seek to quarrel over the obvious fact that a great code of law, of order and of decent business cannot be created in a day or a year," Mr. Roosevelt declared.

All details of the legislation were left to congress. While this is in progress, the senate finance committee proposes to conduct the Nye-McCarran investigation of the NRA administration and codes. The judiciary subcommittee reported no funds available, but the inquiry, which has the President's approval, will be attempted without money.

THIRTY-ONE inmates shot and killed a guard in a spectacular break from the Oklahoma state prison at Granite, the only male penal institution administered by a woman warden. Thirteen were captured shortly afterward and a man-hunt is on for the others. The fugitives used two guns which had been smuggled to them, forced a "trusty" turnkey to open up for them, corralled 20 visitors in the visitors' room and, using them for a shield, made their escape. Her prison already the subject of investigation into its moral and managerial standards, the warden, Mrs. G. A. "Mother" Waters, was ordered replaced by a man, Gov. E. W. Marland declaring that a woman "just can't manage" a prison. Defiantly, she refused to clear out until completed investigations vindicated her.

MORE than 100 men were reported killed or wounded in a skirmish in the "demilitarized" zone which lies between Manchukuo and China north of Tientsin. The clash was between the recently formed Peace Preservation corps and the Lwanchow militia. The Peace Preservation corps, which has the approval of the Chinese government, was receiving money and arms from the Japanese, it was alleged. The militia is supported by local Chinese interests. While the battle was raging, Wang Ching-wei, premier of the Chinese Nationalist government, and Koki Hirota, Japanese foreign minister, expressed themselves as desirous of peace between the two nations.

SELECTING FOOD NO SIMPLE TASK

Choose Intelligently to Get Vitamin Supply.

By EDITH M. BARBER

NATURE offers man every essential for growth, development and maintenance throughout life. As man cannot live without air he is automatically supplied with the oxygen he needs. For the other essentials, however he may exercise his prerogative of choice. His instinct of hunger makes him demand food enough to fill his stomach and thus obtain almost automatically some of the food essentials.

To make the most out of his life, however, he must choose his food with intelligence; otherwise, he may lack essential minerals and vitamins which, although minute in quantity, are most important. He must even go outside the natural food realm for an adequate amount of vitamin D, which is to be found only in butter, full cream cheese, whole milk and eggs. Even in these foods it may vary enormously, because its presence depends upon the amount of sunshine which the animals producing these materials have encountered.

In a natural state primitive man was supplied with vitamin D, because he spent most of his life in the open. Today man must add vitamin D in the form of cod liver oil or halibut liver oil, which although technically foods are usually taken for medicinal reasons.

Instead of using cod liver oil or halibut liver oil, he may now get the vitamin D he needs from a number of irradiated foods. The list of foods which have been irradiated each year has been increasing. There is now one bread, several cereals, some milk, some dehydrated vegetables and pureed vegetables, an infant food, a chocolate malt drink and two yeasts, besides several cod liver, haliver oil and malt products. Cod liver oil and haliver oil although containing a large amount of both vitamins A and D, are irradiated in order to give a concentrate of vitamin D, which sometimes is needed for the children.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

THE return of the vogue of mirrors is a welcome one in decoration. The reflecting of beautiful things, the opportunity to extend vistas in a home, and the chance to make dark corners become sufficiently luminous through the fortunate positioning of looking glasses, are some of the advantages that following this fashion permits. The choice of a good reflecting surface in a mirror becomes a matter of importance if we are to make the most of this decorative opportunity.

Three points should be remembered especially in selecting a mirror. First, is its correct color reflections, second, is its flawless condition, and third, is the thickness of the glass.

Color Considerations.

Color in mirrors is of prime importance since without its being neutral it cannot give back the true reflections except in form and size. The glass must be so treated that it reproduces color correctly. A poor mirror is apt to gray color down. Old mirrors may lose none of their value by this grayish or slightly blue tint, because this is one of their characteristics. But, with improvements in the making of mirrors this feature has been overcome. Today we need not have this trait. We can get things reflected as they are. Or we can have them given a slightly rosy hue. For instance the mirrors in dressing rooms of hotels, and especially those in beauty parlors are apt to have this bluish rose tone. It is flattering to the complexion. Mirrors in some dressers and bureaus in chamber sets have this flattering tone. It certainly is preferable to see oneself appear with a suggestion of pink rather than with a bluish pallor. But best of all is it to see oneself as one is really.

For the reflected truth of a mirror the quality of the glass is responsible as well as the mercurial chemical treatment of the back. A heavy plate glass free from flaws and blemishes and pure as crystal makes for perfection. Flaws are not difficult to discern if the glass is carefully scrutinized.

Testing a Mirror.

The way to test a mirror for quality of thickness of glass and color tones is to press a finger against the glass. If the color of the finger and the color of the reflection are identical, the mirror is A-1 in that particular. If the reflection is bluish, the mirror would prove unsatisfactory. If, on the other hand the reflection has a suggestion of rose, the fault is in the right direction, although not perfect.

The distance between the finger tip and its reflection gives the thickness of the glass. If fingers seem to meet, the glass is very thin. If there is considerable space between finger tips the glass qualifies in this point of excellence.

A new and spectacular landmark has commenced to take form at San Francisco's harbor entrance. It is the south tower of the Golden Gate bridge that, with its twin on the Marin side of the Golden Gate, will support the world's greatest suspension span. Already the first sections of tower steel, some of the units of which weigh 70 tons, have been erected and approximately 1,500 tons of fabricated material are on the loading platform on the south pier fender in readiness to be erected. Photograph shows the south tower of the Golden Gate bridge. In the distance can be seen the north tower on the Marin side.

Farm Hand Turns Bandit; Terrorized Neighborhood

YOUNG MAN RAN AMUCK WITH GUN; IS SHOT BY FARMERS

Considerable Excitement Stirred Up By Would-Be Hold-up Lad

There was considerable excitement in the territory northwest of Klemme Tuesday evening when "Kay" Booth, a young man about 18 years of age, who had been working for Harvey Wiers, went on a rampage with a gun.

To begin the story, Mr. and Mrs. Wiers had left the farm in the car leaving their married daughter at home. While the Wiers were away Booth broke into a bedroom and took a rifle, telling the daughter he was going to hold up her parents when they arrived home and take their car. As the Wiers car came into the farm yard the daughter dashed out and told what was going on. She got in the car and all drove off the place and Booth took a couple of shots at the car. The Sheriff was notified immediately from a neighbor's home but after searching around could not find Booth, so Sheriff Hanson went back to Garner.

Next young Booth appeared at the John Goll farm, holding up John and Jake Goll, trying to get a car from them, but the men bluffed the young bandit into believing they had no keys for the car. He then left on foot and the Golls called the Iowa Union telephone office in Klemme who did a good piece of work in again calling all the farms in the neighborhood to be on the lookout.

Jake and Ben Goll and Emil Blumer were cruising about in a car when they spotted young Booth near the Bub Ulrich school house. They watched him cut across the road into the Ulrich farm yard and so drove in after him, turning on the car lights when they reached the yard. Mr. Ulrich who had been warned over the telephone also saw the prowler in his yard, but as he had no ammunition for his gun, could do nothing about it. He yelled to the men in the car that the young bandit was in his (Ulrich's) car parked just ahead of them. The men called for him to crawl out and surrender as they had him covered. In answer to the challenge he took some shots at them and they returned the fire with a shot gun, the charge of which shattered two windows in Ulrich's car and pieces of glass or shot pellets struck young Booth in the face, blinding him. He crawled out of the car from the opposite side and was about to shoot again when another shotgun charge was fired, some of the pellets hitting his hand. He dropped the gun and the men captured him. The sheriff was called and a Klemme doctor who dressed the wounds and advised Sheriff Hanson to take him to the hospital as his eyes may have been seriously injure A great many people had gathered and the affair caused a lot of excitement in Liberty township.

Young Booth had been paroled from the Eldora Training School and had stated that he did not intend to return there. It seems his desire was to capture a car and get out of the country.

As we go to press we have not learned the extent of Booth's injuries or what disposition will be made of his case.

Again it has been demonstrated that CRIME DOES NOT PAY!

CORN-HOG COMMITTEES BEGIN APPRAISING CORN LAND YIELD

Township corn-hog committees in practically every Iowa county are now appraising the yield of corn land on farm under contract to determine the rental benefit per acre, according to R. K. Bliss, director of the Extension Service at Iowa State College.

Election of county allotment committees have been completed and appraisal schools for township committeement have been held by extension workers. With the sign-up approaching 130,000 in early March, signing of applications is expected to proceed steadily until the deadline of April 1 set by the corn-hog section and the state committee.

The rental benefit payment per acre will be based on a payment of 35 cents per bushel on appraised yield established by the township committee and approved by the county committee and the state board of review .This payment is subject to deduction of the pro-rata share of the local administrative expenses.

After the appraisal work and other detail of completing contracts rae completed, production figures and other data from the contracts will be transferred to listing sheets and submitted to the state board of review in Des Moines. The board of review will check figures and approve the applications. The county and township committees will then have contracts typed in triplicate and obtain the producer's and landlord's final signatures.

As township committees appraise corn yields they also will count hogs on the farms of all producers and stock share landlords who are establishing new hog bases this year or who did not sign in 1934. Where the same hog base is used this year for a 1934 signer, the hog count on the last 1934 compliance check will serve as the first count for the 1935 program.

Supervisors Clamp Down On Relief; Make New Rule

HOG MEN HEAR NEW SWINE TESTING PLAN EXPLAINED

A definite swine testing plan intended to do for hog men what trap nesting and cow testing associations have done for poultry and dairymen is now being considered by some of Iowa's commercial and purebred hog breeders.

Fifty hog men of one Minnesota county have already organized and were scheduled to begin testing on March 1. The organization and program are similar to that of the cow testing associations in Iowa.

Under the testing plan some 50 producers in an area not larger than a county organize, hire a man to supervise gathering of records. Pigs are marked by litters soon after being farrowed, are weighed when 50 to 60 days old, again when 170 to 190 days old, and a rating of all kept.

When sold for slaughter, live market grades are furnished, rail tests are made with cooperation of packing companies. A simple history of the dam and sire is kept, gilts for brood sows are selected from heaviest litter, sows by litter weight and type.

EACH TOWNSHIP NOW HAS DOG CATCHER

County To Bar Relief From Persons Seen In Amusement Places

The Hancock county board of supervisors appointed a dog catcher for each of the 16 townships and towns in the county. Their duty will be to take all of the dogs found without a county license running at large. An effort will be made to find the owner and if not claimed will be disposed of according to law.

The large amount of sheep shipped from the drought area which were killed by dogs allowed to roam more than doubled the amount paid from the domestic animal fund over the previous year.

The Hancock County board of supervisors last Monday passed a resolution that any person or any members of families on relief found frequenting places of amusement, theaters, athletic contests, pool halls or who patronize games of chance will be immediately barred from the relief roll.

CHURCH LOYALTY MIRACLES

Who said the day of miracles is past? Who said people won't go to church? Who said God doesn't answer prayers? Not the people who are in the church loyalty crusade. Word from every part of the state tells of churches being taxed to their capacity in some places, and in others, church attendance increasing from 50 to 200 percent. The colored Methodist church of Mason City had an increase of 300 per cent on Roll Call Sunday.

Reports are not in on last Sunday's achievements, but that of the local Methodist church will long be remembered by all those present. To see the women "pack" the center of the church to overflowing was a surprise to many and a real inspiration.

The young people already surpassed their goal last Sunday evening and a new goal must be set.

What about next Sunday? Many are wishing Sunday were here. We are almost breathlessly waiting It is Mens Day at the morning service. Will the men fill that center section next Sunday as the women did last Sunday? Some say it can't be done. While "Mr. Can't" was wrong the past two Sundays, he is up prophesying again for next Sunday. Men, let's give him a final knock-out Sunday morning.

The Sunday School has also made fine increases the past two Sundays; may there be another good increase next Sunday. The goal is not far away.

ROMANTIC TOWN CENTER OF WAR

Lover Gave It Poetic Name, but Times Change.

According to press reports from Bogota, Love named the town of Leticia in Colombia, and now war threatens its serenity on the banks of the peacefully flowing Amazon.

In 1867 a young engineer was sent down the Amazon river to establish a town on the ancient site of the fort of San Antonio, originally an outpost of the one-time Spanish dominance over South America. Loneliness for his English sweetheart whom he had left behind him prompted the romantic engineer to name the village after her, in violation of his instructions. Her name was Leticia Smith and she was the daughter of an English consular officer at Iquitos.

Upon his return to Iquitos it was found that his fiancee had run away to Mexico with an Englishman. He never saw her again. But to this day the village, now grown to a place of importance, is called "Leticia."

And it is this same town which is today the storm-center of the dispute between Colombia and Peru. Solemn treaties irrevocably established Leticia as Colombian territory. But armed forces of Peruvians seized the town and continue to fortify and to occupy it. The Colombians are indignant at what they term an invasion of their own soil. War may result between Peru and Colombia, and other South American countries may be drawn unwillingly into the conflict. The serenity of Leticia may be ruthlessly uprooted. The eyes of the western world are upon this town, romantically named, 46 years ago, for the love of a woman.

REVOLT FLAMES IN GREECE; EX-PREMIER VENIZELOS HEADS INSURRECTION.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

THE Greek government is making a grim effort to stamp out the fast growing revolt which started in Crete and has spread to the mainland. Greek government planes bombed the home in Crete of former Premier Eleutherios Venizelos, and also struck at five naval vessels manned by rebels, standing off the shore of Crete. Venizelos is openly heading the forces of sedition, and, reports say, has seized $1,000,000 from the Canea treasury to finance the revolt.

Ex-Premier Venizelos

The rebellion has been plotted for a whole year, and broke when 20 naval officers, both active and retired, seized the Salamis arsenal. As the revolt spread, rebels boarded the five warships while the crews were ignorant of the plan, and put under steam. Government planes were dispatched to the scene and pursued the rebel ships down the Aegean sea. The cruiser Averoff was struck by an aerial bomb while the vessel lay in Souda bay, near Crete, and two other ships were reported to have been overtaken and bombed near the Island of Cythera with undetermined damage.

Naval reserves have been called to the colors, and preparations made to call out army classes on the mainland if necessary. Reports that the rebellion has reached Alexandropouils and other towns in Thrace, and that there had been fighting in Seres, eastern Macedonia, indicate that the revolt is more widespread than was first supposed.

The Greek government searched the Athens home of Venizelos and reported finding arms and compromising literature. Searchers found Deputy Papanastitiu, recently an opposition spokesman, and another Venizelos associate named Caphandaris in hiding there. Military restrictions have been tightened in Athens. All radio stations have been ordered to remain silent, and private automobiles are forbidden to circulate. Courts martial have been opened to try rebels, the bourse is closed, and business is practically at a standstill.

DIMINUTIVE King Prajadhipok of Siam has renounced his throne, relinquished his claims to being known as "brother of the moon and possessor of 24 umbrellas," assumed the simpler, if still unpronounceable name of Prince Sukhodaya, and retired to the simple life of an English country gentleman. By his action, the ex-monarch set a record, for it is probably the first time in history that a ruler has abandoned power because his government rejected his demands for greater freedom and democratic control for his people. "My intention that the people should have a real voice in the policy of the government has been ineffective," the ex-king wrote in his message of abdication. "Since I realize that now there is no longer any way of my assisting or protecting the people in the future, I hereby renounce all rights which I had as king or rights of succession, but I reserve the rights which I had formerly enjoyed before accession to the throne." According to London dispatches the throne of Siam has been formally offered to eleven-year-old Prince Ananda, who is now attending school in France.

FERA is making good with its threats that states which do not do their part in supplying relief funds will not get help from the government. Idaho, Minnesota and Washington were notified that their March allotments were being held back until they come across with the funds demanded; and Wisconsin, South Dakota, New Jersey and Ohio received grants for only half of March, the remainder depending on their agreement to furnish certain additional funds. Aubrey Williams, assistant relief administrator, said all the other states were complying with the demands of FERA.

The relief administration took steps to increase the aid being given the drouth-stricken areas of the Middle West. Administrator Harry Hopkins announced in Chicago that in order to tide farmers "over the next three crucial months" the farm credit administration would raise its feed loans from $6 to $10 a month for each head of drouth cattle.

Hopkins added that previous limits on feed loans and direct advances for feed purchases were being weighed, and that "each farmer will be treated as an individual case."

WHO is to be the administrator of the social security program, when and if it is legalized by congress, is a question that is causing a deal of bitterness in Washington. Probably it will ultimately have to be settled by President Roosevelt himself. Secretary of Labor Perkins believes her department should have control of this work, but the house ways and means committee thinks otherwise. It has tentatively decided that the social security board shall be an independent agency, and has turned down a suggestion that the program be administered by a single person. Madame Perkins made a personal call on Chairman Doughton to argue for her proposal, but didn't get anywhere at all with him, so it was figured that she might appeal to the White House.

THE American Federation of Labor proposes to find out immediately what are its chances of fully organizing the workers employed in the automobile industry—and if Doctor Wolman's figures are correct it is likely the federation is doomed to be greatly disappointed. The method adopted is the calling of a secret strike vote among members of the 176 federation locals in the industry. Organizer Francis J. Dillon explained this did not necessarily mean there would be a strike, only the federation's national officers having authority to order such action.

"Now is the time to find out, once and for all," he said, "whether the workers in the automobile industry want the American Federation of Labor. If they want the union, we will find it out through these strike votes. If they don't, well . . . is."

The automobile industry is in the midst of the busiest season it has had since 1930. The great majority of its workers are not in the federation ranks and probably would not strike; but its plants could be seriously crippled by strikes in allied industries. Perhaps the American Federation of Labor leaders have some way of explaining how all this would help on the cause of national industrial recovery.

DONALD RICHBERG, executive director of the National Emergency council, and one of the closest advisers of the President, "guaranteed" that there would be no monetary inflation as long as Franklin D. Roosevelt is President. His statement came in answer to a questioner at a lecture in Boston.

Donald Richberg

"If we are to assume that President Roosevelt will be President for the next six years, I can tell you this: I can guarantee there will be no inflation while Franklin D. Roosevelt is President," Richberg said.

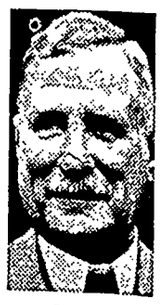
He dodged further discussion of the subject, and refused to comment as to what was being done by the government internationally and nationally on monetary policies. However, Richberg did touch on the Townsend plan for payment of $200 monthly to all persons over sixty. He said:

"If everybody over sixty is to get $200 a month, you can be certain it is going to come out of the pockets of everybody between eighteen and sixty.

"When those under sixty have arrived at the unselfish attitude where they are ready to dig to pay everybody over sixty the $200 a month, there will have been a tremendous spread of real Christianity. But the government can't get the money out of thin air."

Richberg flatly denied that the government was issuing baby bonds because bankers had refused to lend the government money, and asserted that several billion dollars more could be borrowed without endangering national credit.

INTERNAL troubles continue to rock Cuba, and President Carlos Mendieta's regime appears tottering. Manuel Despaigne, the only member of Mendieta's cabinet who was in office, has resigned as secretary of the treasury, completing the rout of the ministry brought about by the school strike. And twelve assistant cabinet secretaries have also deserted the administration.



Carlos Mendieta

The cabinet resignations began over differences of opinion as to how to deal with the strike of several hundred thousand students and teachers which has developed into a national movement to oust the Mendieta administration. Communist-led labor organizations are ready to throw their strength behind a revolutionary general strike, and the situation is becoming critical. Although armed forces are being held in readiness to quell disorders, there is some doubt as to their loyalty to the president. Col. Fulgencio Batista, army chief of staff, was reported ready to throw his support to Dr. Carlos Manuel de la Cruz for president if the Mendieta government falls, but leaders of the anti-Mendieta movement have indicated Batista's choice would not be acceptable to them.

Terrorism continues rampant. Bombing has become general, railroads have been blown up, and Havana has suffered considerable damage to property.

SECRETARY OF STATE CORDELL HULL encountered his third success in carrying out his policy of restoring foreign trade by concluding a series of reciprocal agreements with other nations, when a trade treaty with Belgium was signed. Although not entirely satisfactory to Secretary Hull, it was nevertheless a step along the way. The Belgians gave us a tariff or quota concessions on a number of our exports, including automobiles and parts, calculating machines, radios, grapefruit, pears, oatmeal, and corn starch. We cut tariffs on plate glass, glass sand, iron and steel mill products, linen fabrics, lace and cement. Reciprocal agreements have been previously concluded with Cuba and Brazil.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ended his vacation at Hyde Park and left for Washington where his administration faces serious trouble, involving the prestige of the White House. Capitol Hill is full of lively curiosity over the President's program, and whether he will fight the present congressional defiance of his leadership and go before the people with one of his famed fireside talks, or whether he will agree to a compromise. Mr. Roosevelt at the end of his second year in office faces a predicament in his relation to congress similar to that which confronted Mr. Hoover in 1931.

Sen. Wagner

Unless he regains control his entire program is likely to bog down. The fight hinges on the $4,880,000,000 work-relief program, the first item in the President's budget message and the principal mainstay of his program. Secret conferences at which slices of pork were reported to have been dangled before the avid eyes of revolting senators were said to have been held. A few supporters of the McCarran prevailing wage amendment which wrecked the bill and forced its recommission to the appropriations committee were said to be wavering under the pressure. Senator Robert F. Wagner, who voted for the amendment, acted as peacemaker. He intimated the possibility of a compromise by paying more than the so-called security wage of $50 a month, but still lower than the prevailing rates. Other leaders declared they would not budge from their positions.

Secretary Ickes has been no help to the President in quelling the revolt. In his recent testimony, Ickes was reluctant to tell a senate committee about allocation of $238,000,000 for a naval shipbuilding program. The senators finally pried out information which would indicate that the navy and the speculators knew all about the appropriation, but none of the members of congress knew about it. The money was to be spent at executive discretion, and senators feel this does not augur well for the proposal to hand to Mr. Roosevelt unlimited power in spending the proposed five billion dollar appropriation.

Since next year will bring another Presidential election, a third of the senators will be up for re-election, and all of the house members. They are watching closely the present situation because, if the President is slipping, they want their own records back home in good order.

THE Blue Eagle lost another tail feather the other day, when Federal Judge Nields at Wilmington, Del., held that the collective bargaining provision of NIRA is unconstitutional when applied to companies not engaged in interstate commerce. The administration and organized labor immediately joined in a fight to preserve the validity of Section 7-A, and announced that an immediate appeal would be taken before the United States Supreme court.

The Wagner labor relations bill making Section 7-A the law of the land and outlawing company unions may have to be revised, if Judge Nields is upheld by the high court. The ruling also gives support to opposition now forming in congress against extension of NRA unless it is reorganized.

Judge Nields' ruling was on an injunction suit brought by the government against the Weirton Steel company to enjoin the steel firm from alleged violations of Section 7-A of NIRA and the labor section of the fair competition code of the iron and steel industry. He upheld the right of employees to form company unions for collective bargaining, thus upsetting the claim of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, that the company intimidated employees and dominated the company union. The court held that the company is primarily engaged in state, not interstate commerce, which congress is not empowered to regulate. Judge Nields stated:

"Power to enact Section 7-A was not conferred upon congress by the 'general welfare' recital in the preamble of the Constitution, nor by the welfare clause, Article 1, Section 8, of the Constitution."

Unless the Supreme court reverses Judge Nields, the decision will prevent the New Deal from interfering with employee-employer relationships of a vast majority of American business.

New Deal policies received another jolt the same day when Judge Charles L. Dawson on application of 35 western Kentucky coal operators issued a writ enjoining the government from enforcing the bituminous coal code, reaffirming an earlier decision that the national industrial recovery act was unconstitutional. Judge Dawson declared that the coal mining is an intrastate business, and beyond the power of congress to regulate.

THE United States and Great Britain remain unconvinced of Japan's high purpose in China, although Eiji Amau, foreign office spokesman, declared that Japan is not trying to persuade China to leave the league, and is not urging China to dismiss foreign advisers. He also insisted that no attempt is being made to force China into an Asiatic bloc in return for financial assistance. In Washington, William Phelps, acting secretary of state, and Sir Ronald Lindsay, British ambassador, went into conference. Twenty-four hours later it was announced from London that Great Britain together with the United States, France and Japan was "exploring proposals" to help China financially.

Darwin's Theory Given Rap by English Author

Probably no biologist doubts the validity of evolution. On the other hand, natural selection and the survival of the fittest, the very core of Darwin's theory, are no longer accepted as the sole agencies at work in the creation of new species and varieties. Since the days of Mendel it has become apparent that the mechanism of heredity is both delicate and complex. Moreover, there are the endocrine glands, with their tremendous potentialities for modifying the organism. Lastly, the relation of that organism to its environment is not nearly so direct and simple as Darwin assumed. How the more imaginative biologists think about evolution and especially the problem of man's descent is well exemplified by "The Coming of Man," a recently published book in which Dr. R. Broom, an English authority on amphibians, sets forth his own hypothesis.

It is generally agreed that life first developed in the sea. How, then, did the first amphibian evolve? What was the bold animal that first ventured on land and adapted itself wholly or partially to life under enterly new circumstances? When we ask such questions it is apparent that natural selection and the survival of the fittest do not meet the case.

Doctor Brown holds that physical structure, courage, pugnacity, efficiency were not solely responsible for the transition. There was something unstable about the first adventurer that came out of the sea. He was like an unstable chemical compound that changes into something else—something out of which a reptile could evolve, something that was the result of a crisis.

Examine all the other animals, and the transition from an old to a newer form seems always to be the result of critical instability. Despite the convincing array of fossils that shows plainly enough how the one-toed horse of today evolved from an ancient, five-toed equine animal not much bigger than a St. Bernard dog, the jumps are marked. Between five toes and four toes there is no gradual transition, nothing like a digital diminuendo.

Crisis, everywhere crisis, whether it be fish or amphibian, reptile or mammal. With man it is the same—one of the most unstable creatures ever evolved. In a state of something like fermentation, he has always been in a critical turmoil. Unlike the ant or the bee, he is not highly specialized. If he ever does settle down, his history will be like that of most social creatures—a repetition over hundreds of millions of years of the same biological events and facts. He will cease to evolve.—New York Times.

CONSTIPATION Can be Helped!

(Use what Doctors do)

Why do the bowels usually move regularly and thoroughly, long after a physician has given you treatment for constipation?

Because the doctor gives a liquid laxative that can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Ask your doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help, and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without any help at all.

The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit — even in children. Your druggist has it; ask for—

White House "Families"

Three families have sent two Presidents each to the White House. The Adams family of Massachusetts sent John Adams to the White House from 1797 to 1801. He was a Federalist. His son, John Quincy Adams, Republican, served one Presidential term, beginning in 1825. William Henry Harrison, a Whig, was President from March 4, to April 14, 1841, when he died. His grandson, Benjamin Harrison, Republican, was President from 1889 to 1893. The Roosevelt family of New York was in the White House in the person of Theodore Roosevelt, Republican, from 1901 to 1909. And his fifth cousin, the Democratic President Franklin D. Roosevelt, was elected in 1932.

John Edward Bradley, Altadena, Calif., who won the prize for the best inscription to be placed on the Mount Rushmore National Memorial, is shown above. The heroic Black Hills monument to four immortal Presidents will be completed in 1937, according to A. E. Demaray, associate director of national parks.

Last year the sculptor, Gutzon Borglum, put finishing touches on the majestic countenance of George Washington, and completed that of Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence.

On passage of an Interior department bill now pending, congress will have appropriated $245,000 of the $250,000 authorized. Meanwhile private contributors have donated only $145,000 of the $250,000 expected from them.

Sandhogs Drive Giant Tunnel Forward

Workers Thrust Motor Traffic Tube Ahead

Here is a scene 30 feet below the bottom of the Hudson river, and 170 feet out from the Weehawken shore line, as engineers and sand hogs, working under 13 pounds of air pressure, thrust the giant tunnel toward Manhattan, at a rate of 30 inches at a time. This tunnel is meant for interstate motor traffic and will aid in solving the metropolis' increasingly serious traffic puzzles.

New York city alone in 1933 had 643,534 cars, more than 108,000 trucks and 27,801 taxis and buses registered. The increasing problem of handling the vast volume of traffic between the city and the New Jersey side prompted construction of the tunnel shown above.

Performs Operation on Heart

Cleveland Doctor Makes History

Medical history was made at Lakeside hospital, Cleveland, with the performance of the first operation in the history of the world for the relief of angina pectoris, a heart ailment which in the past has been regarded as incurable and eventually fatal. The operation was performed by Dr. Claude S. Beck, a surgeon at Lakeside hospital. It may mean as much to the world as the discovery of a cure for cancer.

Other physicians have refuted the statement that Beck was the first to perform an operation of this kind, claiming that such a case was reported by Dr. Jonnesco, a French surgeon, in 1920. Jonnesco is reported to have relieved the pain of angina pectoris by resecting the cervical sympathetic nerve chain and the first thoracic ganglion.

Nevertheless, Doctor Beck is receiving the plaudits of medical men all over the country for his brilliant success.

READING BY RADIO!

New York.—"Micro-wave facsimile transmission," in other words, the flashing of entire pages of copy by radio, was mentioned as a future possibility in the annual report of the Radio Corporation of America.

An experimental circuit will be placed in the service this year between New York and Philadelphia.

One of the greatest difficulties is that these ultra-short radio waves which are measured in inches carry only about as far as the eye can see.

It is planned to have relay stations, shunting the signals on.

Sudden Riches Bring Tragedy

Frank Grigoris, the sixty-seven-year-old sandwich man who became a minor hero because he turned over to the police $42,000 in negotiable securities after he found the wallet in which they had been lost, is shown being taken to a New York psychopathic hospital. Doctors explained that the man's mental illness was caused by the new excitements, the flow of unimagined wealth, and the patient's poor physical condition.

A messenger lost the wallet containing the securities and Grigoris, plodding along through the snow, picked it up and turned it over to the police. The news of his honesty became known to the press, radio and motion picture newsreels two days later and he was made much of. As a result Grigoris found himself affluent with a gift of $25 from another brokerage house, a job as a messenger from the owners of the securities, and gifts of all sorts.

A few days later Grigoris aroused the occupants of the Bowery hotel where he was staying with shouts that he was God and had the power to kill a man by simply looking at him. A man who had been standing in the lobby heard the shouts and followed the hotel clerk up the stairs. There they found the sandwich man writhing on the floor. The onlooker stared for a moment at Grigoris and suddenly slumped to the floor dead.

"Probably it would have been better for him to remain a sandwich man, and certainly it would have been better if he had never found that money," said Dr. C. N. Colbert. "His diet before he became famous might not have suited the ordinary human being, but to an old man suffering all the privations he had suffered for years and years and with an acute arteriosclerotic condition, very little food probably was better for him than the comparative richness of his meals since he became a man of means.

"It is possible that he will clear up his own condition. This happens sometimes. It may have been too much for him all at once. In the meantime we are trying to keep him as quiet as possible, for overmuch excitement might kill him now."

Must Be Getting Along in Years

That's what neighbors said about "Aunt Mary" Asay as she celebrated her 112th birthday at the Burlington County Home for the Aged at New Lisbon, N. J. This opinion was reached because in former years she celebrated the occasion with a jig. This year, however, she contented herself by eating a large slice of her birthday cake and singing some thirty odd songs.

Sea Serpent Mystery at Last Solved

Apparently solving the mystery of last summer's sea serpent scare, this huge "Manatee," or sea elephant as it is commonly called, about 18 feet in length and weighing about a ton and a half, was washed ashore near Newport Beach, Calif. The spectators pictured viewing the carcass soon spread the word and in a short time all were agreed that the sea elephant was no doubt what they had mistaken for a sea serpent.

Indian Pueblos Ancient

Older than Santa Fe, older indeed than the memory of man, are the Indian pueblos scattered throughout the canyons and valleys of the Rio Grande. Here the "Oldest Americans" live as they have lived for thousands of years, a peace loving, agricultural people, raising their grain and grazing their animals on the rocky hillsides. These Indians are singularly purely bred.

Swans Mate for Life and Share Responsibilities

Swans are perfect models of conjugal conduct. They mate for life and the sexes share the domestic responsibilities, notes a writer in the New York Herald Tribune.

The downy young when first hatched are not the "ugly ducklings" of popular belief, but lovely little creatures, clothed in silky, golden down and without the exaggerated neck and huge paddle-like feet of their parents. Very soon, however, these characteristics begin to appear and ungainliness replaces their natal loveliness until the grace and beauty of maturity appear.

Geese, like swans, pair for life, and the young birds remain in the company of their parents for nearly a year after they are hatched.

Endowed with keen intelligence and extreme wariness, they can be depended on to maintain a fair degree of abundance as long as adequate wintering grounds are afforded them. But, above all, they, like swans, require freedom from molestation when they are at rest, so that a large measure of solitude and wide spaces are the chief requirements for their perpetuation.

Ducks, for the most part, are very different from swans and geese in their family habits. While they pair like other birds, and are not as a rule polygamous, the male in most species is not a constant husband, and abandons the female and all family cares as soon as incubation of the eggs is well under way. Stiff-tailed ducks, however, are notable exceptions to this rule.

Indian Is Given Credit for Discovering Oyster

Cleopatra set the fashions in the days of the Roman empire. However, history leads us to believe that Caesar planned the menus. Humming bird tongues on toast were used sparingly, but the "ostrea" was plentiful and highly prized among the Romans, writes Dorothea Duncan, in the Washington Post. The "ostrea" in English-speaking countries is an oyster. Sallust (86-35 B. C.), after returning from a jaunt to England with Caesar, said he could find only one good thing in the Britons; "they eat oysters."

The Greeks had a word for oyster, too—"ostrean." The word means bone or shell. The French took the term and changed it to "oistro" and from this our word oyster is derived.

An Indian is given credit for discovering the oyster in America. One day he was fishing and seeing a peculiar looking "stone" in the water, stretched out his hand to it. The oyster shell closed on his finger. He smashed the shell from his hand with his tomahawk, put his finger in his mouth and discovered the delicious flavor of the oyster.

Oysters were so popular in early England that they featured in the social customs of the country. In the midlands, at Christmas, oyster suppers were given.

Calvin Coolidge was sworn in at the Coolidge home, Plymouth, Vt., on August 3, 1923, by his father, Col. John Coolidge, who was a justice of the peace.

Mt. Shasta's Peak

Mt. Shasta's peak is the crater of an extinct volcano. Scientists say the last eruption occurred many thousand years ago. However, after all these centuries, steam and hot fumes rise continuously from the crater. At times food may actually be cooked by merely setting the pans on the ground. A meal may be warmed in a few minutes in this manner—and this just a few feet from snow and ice banks 30 feet deep. The Indians say in whispers that the summit of Shasta is the tepee of their ancient chief, mighty Isasta, for whom the mountain is named, and that the heat on the crest is kept for the day when he will return once more to be the head of many braves.

"Little Peter"

The little Mother Carey's chicken, or "storm-petrel," is a small bird and sooty black save for a large white patch at the base of the tail. Its habit of pattering with its feet on the water as it flies is familiar to mariners, who in consequence, likened its action to that of the Apostle Peter, who, we are told, walked upon the water, and hence the name petrel, French "Peter-elle," meaning "Little Peter."

Criminals to Fly

Forty years ago an aeronautical congress was held in Chicago. An eminent scientist there suggested that in view of the risk in experimenting with flying machines, criminals should be detailed for duty in the common cause of science and humanity.

French Architect Responsible

The popularity of mirrors as decorations and ornaments in public edifices and private homes traces back to an innovation introduced by Robert de Cotte (1657-1735), a famous French architect of the period of Louis the Great.

Manx Cat Is Not Always Born Without the Tail

The animal known as the Manx cat is not a separate species, but a variety of the house cat, says the Montreal Herald. Its principal peculiarities are unusually high hips and a very short tail. A similar variety is said to exist, or formerly did so, in the Crimea. The tails of animals are in general a highly variable part of their anatomy, especially as to length, and this is true of cat genus (Felix). The length of an animal's tail depends on the number of vertebrae it contains, ranging from none at all in the great apes, rabbits and so forth to 46 in a pangolin.

Among the cats those which, like the lion or tiger, pass their lives on the ground have the longest of these appendages, while the smaller, tree-climbing cats show shorter ones as a rule. The Manx cat has only three caudal vertebrae, and its sacrum (the solidified end of the backbone, of which the tail-bones are a continuation) has become shortened. Another characteristic of this breed is that the hinder part of the body is elevated. Manx cats, however, are not invariably tailless; here and there one is born which is provided with a token that he is not wholly a freak; and, curiously, white Manxes are almost unknown and black ones are extremely rare.

It Has Been Proved Fish Are Really "Stone Deaf"

We use the expression "blind as a bat," without warrant, but "deaf as a fish" would be in order, since it is practically proved that fishes are "stone deaf." Hearing is so often associated with seeing that, when fishes are startled, it is usually impossible to be sure whether it was the sight of something, or the sound that affected them. The splash of a stone in the water frightens them, but is the fright caused by the sight of a solid object, by the noise of its fall, or by the commotion it causes?

To test the effect of sound on fishes experiments have been conducted in a large aquarium occupied by a variety of species. A protected electric bell was placed in the glass-sided tank, and sounded repeatedly without any visible effect on the fishes whatever. To determine whether a high-pitched and shrill sound would disturb them a whistle of penetrating note was introduced. None of the fishes took the slightest notice, showing neither fear nor curiosity.

Empire of the Mayans

At about the time of Christ the early or southern empire of the Mayans first began to become an entity in what is now Guatemala and the east coast of Yucatan, says the Boston Herald. This region is dotted with mounds of ruins, discovered and undiscovered, and often as not covered with trees and vegetation so as to be almost untouched, the remains of once flourishing cities. From about 200 to 650 A. D., this southern empire was in its affluence. The buildings of this period are magnificent, but do not attain the scale, the elaboration of design and number of rooms that characterized the late empire of the North. The hieroglyphs on the lintels and stelae, are more elaborate than those of Chichen-Itza, however.

Alabama's Capital

Montgomery is the economic capital of Alabama's fertile "black belt"—extending across the state from east to west—a highly productive strip of land so ideally suited to the boll weevil that the farmers have been forced to turn to other crops. Formerly the region was devoted almost entirely to cotton raising; now Montgomery is a center for a growing cattle and dairying industry, and its fertilizer, lumber, cotton seed oil and cotton mills, have given it a new economic importance. Since 1920 it has increased in population from about 40,000 to nearly 70,000. At the outbreak of the Civil war it was merely a cotton center of about 15,000 people.

Discovery of Bee Trees

Discovery of bee trees in the deep forest depends more upon design than upon chance, hunters for wild honey usually making their discoveries by tracing burdened bees back to their hoarding places, marking the trees for their own and returning at some later time for the raid, with saw or ax, smoke bellows, large knife and containers for golden wealth that may average from 35 to 80 pounds to a tree and sometimes run into the hundreds of pounds. Old-time bee-tree hunters in the Ozarks frequently cut two or three trees a day.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Moffat Tunnel

The Moffat tunnel pierces the Rocky mountain at the so-called Continental divide, in Grand and Gilpin counties, Colorado. It is on the line of the Denver & Salt Lake railway, with its eastern portal 50 miles west of Denver, and it shortens by 23 miles the traveling distance. The bore, 32,150 feet long, begun in 1923 and holed through on February 18, 1927, was opened to train traffic in February, 1928.

Bombay

Bombay, one of India's gateways, is a modern, throbbing city housing a varied population. Kipling called it "India's Queen of Cities." It is a modern city with splendid public buildings. From Malabar hill you may have a remarkably fine view of Bombay. Beyond the hill is the "Tower of Silence," where the Parsees give up their dead to the birds of the air.

Think It Over

The Government claims it will reduce electric rates. The instruments being used are "easy money," competitive threats and propaganda.

At the same time the Government is forcing upward the costs of manufacture and distribution of electricity just the same as it is forcing upward the costs of food and clothing.

Costs cannot continue upward and revenue downward without jeopardizing every investor's holdings. This situation affects every man, woman and child in the nation as life insurance companies, savings banks, schools, hospitals, churches—in fact practically all institutions are large holders of electric company securities.

This attack therefore strikes at the very foundation of investing confidence and this lack of confidence is the largest obstacle on the road to recovery.

No honestly operated electric company will, or has, objected to fair regulation and, as in the past, rates will be reduced as fast as increased use permits.

If the Government continues this attack it will directly or indirectly destroy all confidence and bring financial ruin to millions—and in the meantime recovery is retarded.

It is not a paying proposition to play hookey from dear old Klemme. It has been tried a number of times; each time proves unsuccessful.

Sometimes it has been a celebration, sometimes a corn husking contest, but the latest temptation was a "barn dance frolic," a temptation which three of our students could not resist so off they went. The next morning however, a three thousand word theme awaited them and alas their work had to be made up and they could not return to class until such was done. They reported that the barn dance frolic was "swell" but the attack of finger cramps was not. So I warn you stray not from the pathway leading to our fair school or you too must suffer the unpleasant consequences.

What National Holiday Do yYou Most Enjoy And Why?

The holiday that I like best is Christmas. You probably guessed the reason why—lots of presents, but that isn't the only reason. Isn't the only reason. Isn't it grand when friends and relatives are reunited on that day? Yes, Christmas is indeed a wonderful occassion.—Delorys Cook.

Well, as you can probably see I like something with a little zip to it, and since the Fourth of July is plenty zippy, that's my choice. I always get a big thrill out of hearing a dull boom and seeing a tin can sail skyward; and what is prettier than a skyrocket or flower pot showering sparks into the air? A lot of money is burned up this way every Fourth, but it only happens once a year so what's the difference.—Lyndon Kilgore.

Of all the holidays we have I like Fourth of July the best. The weather is always warm and you can have a good time doing nothing. On the Fourth of July you can eat and drink all the ice cream and pop and other things you want.—Esther Trampel.

I enjoy the Fourth of July best. There is a lot of noise to make you happy and full of pep. There are shows, celebrations and dances to go to. Also it is warm then. You can go swimming, skating and enjoy many other outdoor sports.—Buster Jorgenson.

As I am the only one that really knows me, I will have to confess that I like Thanksgiving the best of all the holidays. You know there is usually a stuffed turkey for dinner, but I can tell you I am pretty well stuffed myself, or should I say I resemble Wimpy after he has eaten many hamburgers. There is much to do on every Thanksgiving day, so let's have Roosevelt add a couple more to every year.—Nora Wellemeyer.

Termites Everywhere; Do Much Damage Every Year

It has been estimated that termites, tiny ant-like insects that feed on wood, annually damage buildings to the extent of millions of dollars, asserts a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

Termites, sometimes improperly called the white ants, are prevalent in practically every section of the United States. They live in colonies just beneath the surface of the ground and commute daily to their cafeteria, which is your house. They feed with gusto on foundation posts, siding, joists, walls, studs or wood flooring that may be handy. The flavor of the inner portion of wooden members seems most to their liking, since they bore into the wood, leaving the surface intact, thus escaping detection.

Persistent and resourceful creatures, if they find no wood in direct contact with the ground, they will often blaze a trail through poor mortar joints in old foundations and build tunnels up the inside wall to reach the wood, which they completely destroy in time.

It is easy to determine whether termites are present in a building by simply examining the outside of the foundation. Tiny dirt tunnels, which may appear to be soil washed up on the masonry, reveal the trail of these destructive insects.

Britain's King's Silver Jubilee From the Bible

There have been a number of occasions when a Silver Jubilee could have been celebrated in observance of a sovereign's accession to the throne, says the Montreal Herald. The last was in 1862, when Queen Victoria completed her first 25 years as monarch. But the death of the Prince Consort just six months before the anniversary made any special rejoicing out of the question.

Kings whose Silver Jubilee could have been celebrated were George II, George III, and Henry VIII. In all three cases there were reasons which would have made public celebrations rather inappropriate.

The idea of the jubilee comes to us from the Bible. The Hebrews used to keep every fiftieth year as a year of jubilee, and the Roman Catholic church took over the idea by instituting years of remission, during which plenary indulgence might be obtained by pilgrimage to Rome and by other works of piety. The intervals between these jubilee years have varied from time to time.

Tottering Pyramids

Chichen-Itza means in translation "The Mouth of the Wells of the Itza Tribe," and in the meaning of this short name, notes the Boston Herald, is embodied the keynote to the whole panorama of a decayed civilization which reared monumental white limestone buildings covered with carvings of the god of rain and water whom the Mayans worshipped, and of the serpent god whom they feared. In its name this bygone city succinctly tells why it became the queen of all the stone metropolises that dotted Yucatan in the empire of a thousand years ago, a city of wells and water, and the ceremonial and cultural center of a race whose descendants now only look upon these tottering pyramids, gleaming in the hot Mexican sun, and dream idly of the grandeur of their ancestors.

Jaboticaba Tree Exhibit

The curious jaboticaba tree, native of the southern states of Brazil from Rio Grande do Sul to Minas Garaes, is represented by an exhibit in the hall of plant life at Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago. This strange tree has delicious grape-like fruit which grows abundantly in small clusters directly from the thin bark of the trunk and large branches. In South America the jaboticaba tree is cultivated as well as growing wild over a large area. The globular fruit has a tough and rather thick skin inclosing a juicy vinous pulp and one or more large seeds.

Pay for "Air Rights"

Not only are large amounts paid for "air rights," or the privilege of erecting buildings over railroad tracks, but sizable sums are sometimes paid merely for the right to use the light and breathe the air over certain areas. For example, in 1929 a skyscraper in New York leased for 33 years the light and air rights over a five-story building next door for $742,500.—I. J. Kline, New York city, in Collier's Weekly.

Affect Man's Health

Meadow mice affect man's health. They are the natural hosts of the dog tick which is the bearer of the virus causing the dreaded Rocky Mountain spotted fever. The young tick must attach and feed upon the blood of a mouse before it can mature and attach itself to a dog or to man. Without the mouse the tick could not complete its life cycle.

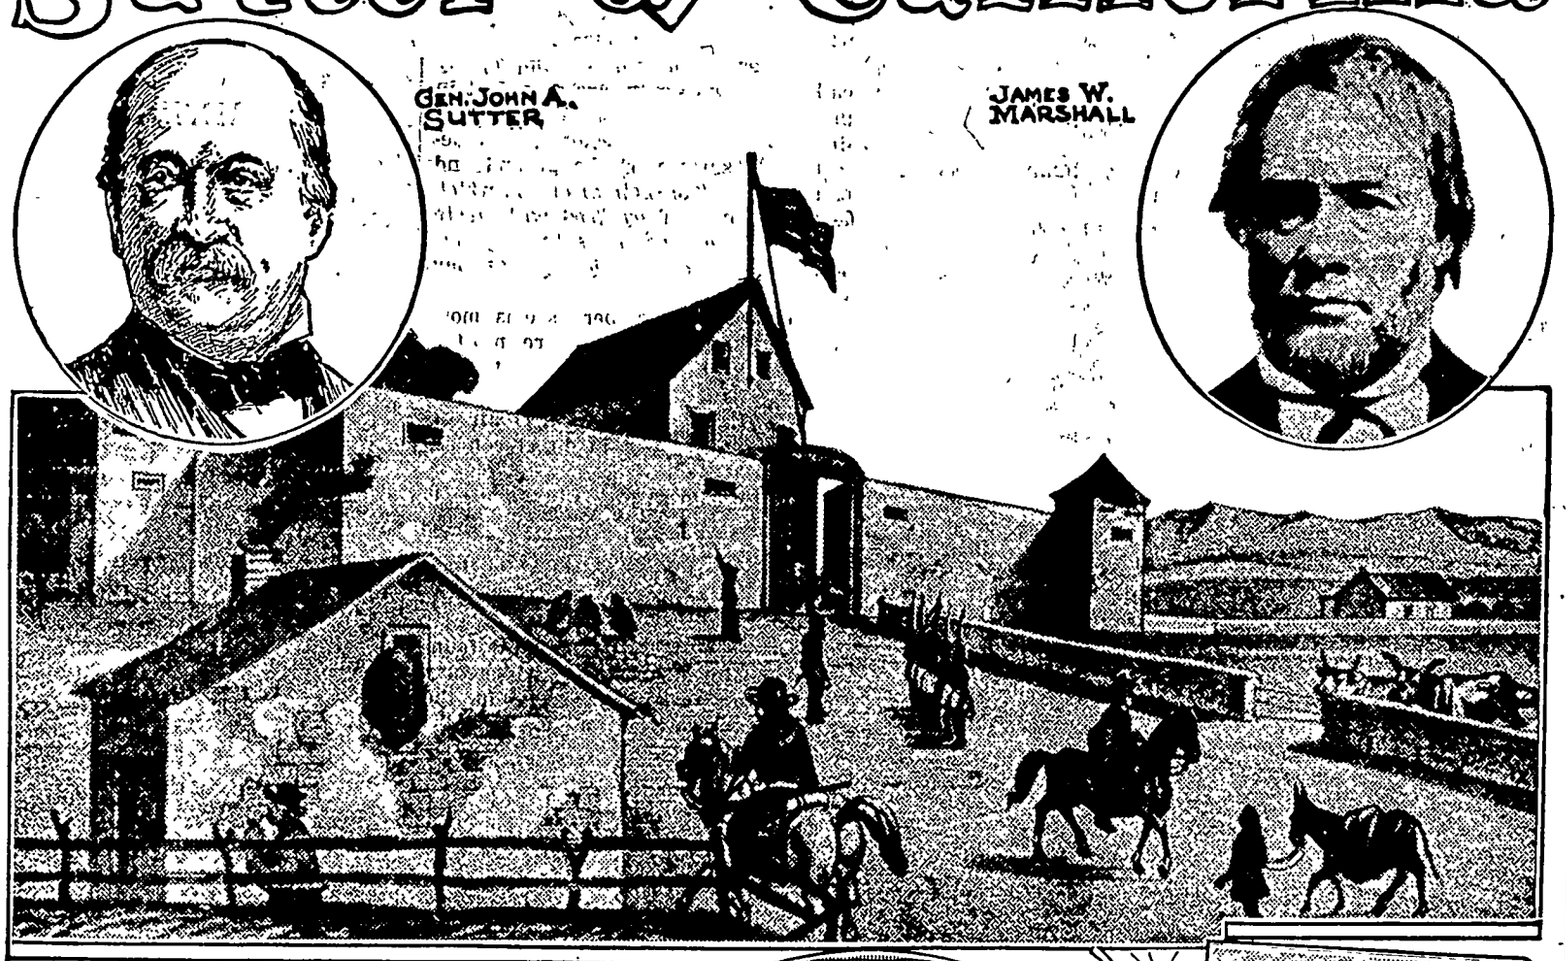
Sutter of California



SUTTER'S FORT, NEW HELVETIA

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE recent "gold decision" of the Supreme Court of the United States, awaited so long and so anxiously by the whole world, has added another chapter to the history of money, and especially to that much-discussed and frequently perplexing angle of it, commonly known as the "gold standard." It is a far cry from the event which took place in Washington the other day to an event which took place in a little European village one February night 132 years ago—a far cry, indeed, from the stately hall where sit the black-robed justices of a nation's highest tribunal to a small room in the cottage of a Swiss paper-maker. Yet there is a distinct connection between the two.

Just before midnight on February 23, 1803, a son was born to Johann Jakob Suter and his wife, Christine Wilhelmine Stoberin Suter, but if, the next morning, anyone had told the simple burghers of Kandern in the Grand Duchy of Baden that this little boy's career would change the destiny of a new nation across the Atlantic and vitally affect the economic history of the whole world, they would have stared at such a prophet with unbelieving eyes. But he would have spoken the truth. For the world, half a century later, was to know this little boy, whom his parents named Johann Augustus Suter, as Gen. John Sutter—Sutter of California, the man whose name has become almost synonymous with the name of a yellow metal so highly prized by mankind—gold!

The result was his decision to seek his fortune in the New world and 100 years ago this spring the Odyssey of John Sutter (he had changed his name upon his arrival here) in America began. First a trader on the Santa Fe Trail, he went to the Oregon country in 1838, made a trip to the Sandwich islands and to Alaska and finally on July 1, 1839, arrived in San Francisco, then called Yerba Buena by the Mexicans, and started on the career in the country which was to make his name forever famous.

At that time most of the settlements in California were along the coast but Sutter proposed to go inland and colonize. Obtaining a land grant from the Mexican officials he set out to select a site for his proposed colony. In August he arrived at a point where the American river joins the Sacramento, the site of the present capital of California. There he established his colony to which he gave the name of New Helvetia, after his homeland of Switzerland, and erected the fort which was to be the focal point in the empire he was to build.

The story of that empire is a familiar one—how he won the friendship of the Indians by using just the right mixture of kindness and firmness; how they formed a part of the hundreds of retainers who tilled the fields and tended the herds and flocks of this feudal lord in the American wilderness; how he extended his holdings of land until he ruled over nearly 250,000 acres; and how he became the most important figure in all that region, both under the Mexican rulers and later when California passed from their hands into the possession of the United States.

To Sutter's Fort came many a notable traveler—Col. John C. Fremont, Kit Carson, Gen. Stephen Kearney, a young lieutenant named William Tecumseh Sherman and another named W. J. Revere, the latter a grandson of Paul Revere, who inherited some of his ancestor's talent for drawing and who made the sketch of the fort which is reproduced above. From Sutter's Fort went out the rescue party which saved the remnants of the ill-fated Donner party marooned in the snowy Sierras in 1847 and many another stirring chapter in California history was enacted in and around the capital of New Helvetia.

Many of these are recorded in the extracts from Sutter's diary with which Mr. Dana embellishes his biography. John Sutter could not have realized what history he was recording when he took his pen in hand one day to write this:

"August 27th, 1847. A host of Mormons here to buy provisions and have blacksmith work done. Made a contract with James Wilson Marshall for a sawmill to be erected on the American Fork."

Even more fateful is the entry for the following day:

"August 28th. Horses shod of many more Mormons. Employed nearly all them to work here since they seem to be uniformly honest, honorable and hard-working. James Wilson Marshall and Peter Wimmer departed early for the Mts. to determine a proper sawmill site. . . ."

When Sutter wrote that, he was writing the doom of New Helvetia. For the "proper sawmill site" which Marshall and Wimmer selected happened to be where some golden flakes lay near the surface of the ground and it was a Mormon, with booming voice, shouting the news of the discovery in San Francisco, who started the mad gold rush which ruined John Sutter.

SAMUEL BRANNAN

"GOLD! GOLD! GOLD from the AMERICAN RIVER"

One other fateful entry in Sutter's diary deserves quoting. On Friday, January 28, 1848, he recorded "Mr. Marshall arrived from the Mts. on very important business." The "important business" was to show Sutter some yellow flakes he had discovered in the tail-race of the sawmill he was building in the "beautiful vale" of Coloma, 40 miles away. They tested the flakes. It was gold!

Despite Sutter's efforts to keep the discovery a secret, the news leaked out. A teamster named Wittmer, hauling provisions to the sawmill, learned the news from one of Peter Wimmer's chattering sons. Wimmer in turn let slip the secret to Samuel Brannan, a Mormon elder who had led a colony from the East to California in 1846, had published one of California's first newspapers in Yerba Buena for a short time and was now running a store near Sutter's fort. Brannan was a crafty person. If news of the gold discovery in the Sacramento valley became known, it might start a gold rush there. The gold-seekers would need supplies. They could obtain them from Elder Samuel Brannan's store. Therefore . . .

So, one day in May, 1848, a horseman galloped through the main street of San Francisco. "In his right hand he carried a bottle of glittering yellow grains.

"'Gold! Gold!' he cried, 'Gold from the American river!'"

It was Elder Samuel Brannan.

Col. R. B. Mason, American military commander at San Francisco, paid little heed to the first news of the gold discovery. But as the rumors increased, his young adjutant, Lieut. W. T. Sherman, urged him to investigate. So Mason gave Sherman permission to visit Sutter's fort and learn the truth of these rumors. From that visit grew a friendship which had an interesting aftermath for both Sherman and Sutter. During his visit Sherman collected $3,000 worth of gold nuggets and hurried back to San Francisco. Then he wrote a long report which Mason signed and this, with the nuggets packed in a tea caddy, was sent by special courier to Washington. When President Polk, a little later, startled the world with the announcement of the gold discovery in California it was Sherman's words that he quoted.

What followed is a familiar story—the lust for the golden metal which swept the whole world and sent thousands by land and by sea to California. Sutter's empire of New Helvetia crumbled under the onrush of the gold-hungry fortune-seekers. In 1850 California became a state and Sutter believed that now his property rights would win recognition. But he was disappointed. In 1851 he realized a long-deferred ambition—that of bringing his wife and children to join him in his new home.

But the years which followed were sad ones for the man who had been "king of New Helvetia." Little by little, his property slipped away from him. Court decisions in his favor were followed by others against him. Soon only one small farm remained and there came the climax of his misfortunes. One night his house was set on fire. He and his family barely escaped with their lives. All of his deeds and other papers went up in flames.

In October, 1866, he started for Washington, confident that the American government would see that justice was done him. It was the beginning of a 14-year fight for justice.

He had the aid of powerful friends, one of them William Tecumseh Sherman, now a famous general. But congress repeatedly turned a deaf ear to his appeals. In June, 1880, he made another of his interminable trips to Washington.

"Washington was hot that June; and getting hotter. Perspiring members of both houses were eager for an adjournment. John Sutter's claim found itself, as customary, on the tag-end of the session's business. . . . Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman sat in the gallery, mopping his face with a handkerchief waiting to carry the good news to the Swiss. . . .

"In his hotel room, Sutter lay on his bed and slept. He was very weary; happy, too, that this was the last journey he would have to make to Washington. It was all settled. The pittance was to be finally allowed . . .

"Five o'clock came; a knock at the door awakened the general. . . . The door opened. Sherman came in. There was a bleakness on him and his lips were straight.

"Sutter stood up, expectant. 'The claim?' he said, the blue eyes certain.

"'It's a d—d shame, general!' burst out Sherman. 'They're adjourned. Your claim didn't even go to a vote.'

"A strangeness came into the blue eyes. They seemed to grow cold and old; blue ice they seemed to be, ice from a far-off Swiss glacier that suddenly ceased to know the sunlight.

"'Next year,' he said clearly, 'next year they will surely—'

"He fell suddenly, like a stricken thing, back upon the bed. Sherman ran forward with a cry, shifted him slightly, held up the white head tenderly.

"John Sutter had passed beyond caring for any earthly claim, or for the task of sifting the ashes of empire . . ."

And so the Swiss adventurer died, but the story of "Sutter's gold" which ruined him has kept his memory alive through all these years. As for the way in which his career changed the destiny of a nation, one historian has summed up the results of the discovery and the enormous production of gold in California during the next half century as follows: It raised the price of goods and labor; it opened new markets and extended commerce; it filled a wilderness with settlers, stimulated the development of the Pacific coast, established new lines of steamships, and in time made a transcontinental railroad a necessity; it extended the domain of free labor on the Pacific coast and effectually shut out slavery in all that part of the West; and it was one of the causes which induced the majority of the nations of Europe to stop the coinage of silver and to adopt gold as their sole standard money." And that is why there is a connection between the birth of Johann Augustus Suter in a little German village away back in 1803 and the world-wide interest in the "gold decision" of the United States Supreme court in Washington the other day.

What Is Ahead?
Muscles Soon Old
The Moon Pulls Us
To Toughen Your Legs

In 1914, as the world gradually moved toward war, no one in Europe realized what was happening or going to happen.

Arthur Brisbane

In 1935, as this country moves toward the result of various theories, experiments and efforts, nobody has the vaguest idea of what is really about to happen.

Almost anything might happen. It is possible, and fortunately probable, that what has happened before will happen again, that business and industry will gradually find their way back to normal, and, with officially shortened hours making labor scarce, the slogan may change from "Let the government support me" to "Give me a chance to work and climb to the top."

That may come, and something very different may come.

Once in so often it is necessary for nations and individuals to learn wisdom through first-class failure. That may be on the program for this country at this moment. The wise man will make his arrangements.

Time passes quickly; age comes soon if you depend for success on muscles, legs, arms or eyes. Fifteen years ago Babe Ruth, "home run king," was bought by "the Yankees" for $125,000, highest price ever paid up to that time for a baseball player. Now, only forty-one years old, he is released and goes to the "Boston Braves," who are not asked to pay even a penny for the man that has drawn millions of men and dollars to the club that "owned" him.

As we go around the sun, with the moon circling round our little earth, and our sun doubtless revolving around some other great central star unknown to us, the moon is always pulling at the earth, as a child pulls at its mother's skirt. That pull gradually causes the earth to "slow down" in speed, turning on its axis.

Doctor Nicholson, astronomer at Wilson observatory, says this constant pull of the moon will eventually make the earth turn so slowly that its day will be 47 days long instead of 24 hours.

"Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings."

Jack Dempsey, who really seemed to like fighting, apart from the profit, in his championship days, discussing other fighters in his "sere and yellow leaf" at forty, says men that refuse to do "road work" should know that "you can't toughen your legs in a chair or posing for pictures."

Legs are not important, but brains are. Young gentlemen should know that you cannot toughen your brains, or make them work better, without thinking.

Chancellor Hitler orders every man in Germany, young or old, to take physical training and be ready to fight. The Spartans trained men early, even taught the young to murder working slaves for practice. They did not last long.

In New York a boy of fifteen, his father "on relief," leaves home and a message saying: "I am going to get a job of my own and help myself."

That expresses the feeling of millions of Americans compelled to be on the dole or relief against their will. It is to be hoped that depression, relief and dole will end before too many Americans lose the habit of work and the desire for it.

Mr. James J. Walker, once mayor of New York, writing a column for the London Sunday Dispatch, supplies one paragraph that he probably meant. Others might remember it:

"After all, the counting of time is not so important as making time count."

Senator Carter Glass, who takes money seriously, says, "We are on a fiat money basis." Possibly, but we seem to be doing better than when we were on a gold basis.

Do you notice much difference? Is money more plentiful, are prices lower? Is not money scarce, is not everything dearer, on the contrary?

Who knows anything about money? Nobody.

Senator Thomas of Oklahoma, for instance, says the United States is still "on the gold basis." Former President Hoover wants to go back to the gold basis, even if we have to be content with a 59-cent dollar, based on the new kind of "expensive gold."

Wiley Post failed in his effort to fly the continent in eight hours because of a mechanical accident. His plan was to travel 40,000 feet up in the stratosphere, where slight atmospheric resistance makes high speed possible. He will try it again. American flyers fortunately are not easily discouraged. If they were, the flying machine would not have been invented here.

ing under the jurisdiction of the Adjustment act. In addition to the processors, about nine hundred thousand retailers handling these products are subjected to control, directly or indirectly, by AAA licenses. Consequently, we see more than a million who could do business only if the Department of Agriculture saw fit to grant licenses. And when I say the Department of Agriculture, in law, it simmers down to the secretary of agriculture. Secretary Wallace's policies and his personal attitude, I believe, are not such as to give cause for alarm respecting administration of these proposed licensing provisions. Yet, it has been freely suggested that a time may come when the secretary of agriculture will be neither as good nor as wise as Mr Wallace. You can make your own guess as to the possibilities under the regime of a secretary of agriculture who was not big enough for the job.

These circumstances and conditions, in the minds of many observers here, point only to one thing now: the Adjustment act and the program drafted thereunder is not as popular as it was before it went into operation. Judging from correspondence received by representatives and senators, the Adjustment program is actually repugnant to some sections. I believe it only fair to state, however, that the Adjustment program is not blamed wholly for the increase in prices but always in times like these and under circumstances like those to which attention has been directed there has to be a goat. Apparently that goat is going to be the Department of Agriculture and its step-child, the Agricultural Adjustment administration.

Garner Overlooked

While all of the newspapers are printing many columns in review of two years of the Roosevelt administration and much attention is being paid to President Roosevelt, it seems to me that one stalwart of the administration—Vice President John N. Garner—is being somewhat overlooked. It seems to me, also, that this should not be the case because all observers agree that Mr. Garner has placed the vice presidency of the United States on something of a new plane.

Much levity always has been directed at any man holding the job of vice president. It is true that the vice president is seldom, if ever, out front, as the expression is. With Mr. Garner, however, it has been decidedly different. I believe, from all of the discussions that I have heard since his election, Mr. Garner has filled, and is filling, a very constructive post in this administration.

Although Mr. Garner weighs about the same and is no taller; while he dresses much as he did before and his wit and humor is much the same, it certainly can be said that he is a much bigger man in the eyes of the people of this country than he was a few years ago. In other words, given the opportunity, Mr. Garner has performed in a way that probably will record him in history as among the outstanding individuals who have filled that second ranking elective post in our government.

It is not generally known, I think, how much influence Mr. Garner wields in the Roosevelt administration. He sits with Mr. Roosevelt and the other members in the cabinet meetings and there is no doubt among observers here that those men lean upon the long experience which the vice president has had.

We Import Corn!

The port of Baltimore, Md., witnessed an unusual sight the other day, arrival of a shipload of corn from Argentina. It was the first full cargo ever to arrive in that port and caused some observers to remark that it appeared to be "carrying coals to Newcastle."

This would have been true under conditions such as we used to have in this country before the inauguration of the Agricultural Adjustment administration. The AAA has made the difference. Last year, the AAA set about reducing the corn acreage in this country because it was the conviction of the New Deal that production had been too great. Twenty per cent curtailment was decreed. To accomplish that end, the AAA offered to pay farmers at the rate of thirty cents per bushel for not growing corn. The plan worked as it might naturally be supposed to have worked and there was the expected curtailment of production.

But nature took a hand and the drouth settled down over the vast corn producing areas of the Middle West. So great was this disaster that there is not now sufficient corn to meet domestic requirements. Importation of corn resulted, and the port of Baltimore had the novel experience of seeing corn shipped in instead of out.

Secretary Wallace has defended the AAA policies on the ground that they were exceedingly flexible and could be used to increase or decrease production as conditions required. It seems, however, that corn has a habit of growing only during the summer months and if the production in that period is insufficient the winter months must witness a shortage.

Let Our Motto Be GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

DIET IN RELATION TO COLDS

The more we study diet and nutrition, the more we are convinced that many health problems can be best corrected by diet. More and more we are coming to believe that we are what we are as a result of what we eat.

Our whole body is enclosed in an epithelial tissue membrane. At places it is dried and thickened to protect us against friction, as the skin. At other places it is a thin moistened layer as in the nose, mouth and throat. Many people do not think of it this way, but the lining membrane of the air tract, the wind passages and the lung cells, are really body surface coverings.

The lining of the digestive tract is likewise another body surface covering. Considered as such, the contents of the digestive tract are outside of the body. The body surface selects from the food that we send to the digestive tract by way of the mouth, the substances it needs.

Obviously, if we do not give it the right materials to work upon, the body cannot have its maximum efficiency. A body that is not given the right food can never be as efficient or healthy as the body that has the right "stoking."

In many experiments, which we have been conducting in our medical research laboratories, we have found that one of the very important functions of this body surface covering, whether it is the outside skin or the lining of the breathing tract or the digestive tract, is to prevent the invasion of bacteria. Healthy skin has a marvelous power for disinfecting itself. When germs land on healthy body surfaces, they are promptly and efficiently destroyed.

You can, for instance, place millions of germs on the skin of your hand or any other part of your outside body surface, except under your finger nails, and the line where the outside skin and the lining membrane meet at your mouth, your nostrils and around your eyes, and if the skin is clean the germs will disappear of themselves within a few minutes.

You can likewise breathe in many germs and swallow many germs without being affected in any way, providing the lining of the breathing tract and the lining of the digestive tract are in good healthy condition. But if the mucous lining is inflamed or "sick" in any way, then the affected part loses its self-disinfecting power, and bacteria gain an easy entrance to the body.

Man is an omniverous animal; that is, he is a meat and vegetable eater. The anatomy and the physiology of his stomach and intestinal tract show that he has developed through untold generations upon a mixed diet of meat and vegetables. A good big beefsteak makes us feel good. We secrete more gastric juice after eating a meat meal. We use more oxygen per unit of body weight after a beefsteak than after a vegetable meal of the same theoretical heat-producting units. In other words, our habits of eating three times the amount of animal proteins necessary to replace our daily loss of these substances has a sound scientific basis. We are unconsciously stimulating ourselves. This is healthful.

The American public has been made vitamin-conscious as a result of the advertisements appearing in the press. Vitamins are grouped into two big classes, those promoting normal growth and those aiding us in maintaining health after adult age has been reached. We cannot always separate these two classes of vitamins from a public health standpoint. These substances have been eaten along with energy producing and protein replacement foods for so many centuries that man has become so accustomed to these accessory materials he cannot do without them. They are the lubricating agents of our complex interacting body machinery.

We have found in tests which we have made in our research laboratories that an unbalanced diet, that is, one in which necessary vitamins are absent, causes these lining membranes of the breathing and digestive tracts to lose their power of destroying bacteria. Then germs can invade us because our defenses have lost their ability to defend.

In tests which we have been making in the last three years, we have learned that most of the people who suffer from frequent head colds eat too much starchy food. They do not get enough of the health-necessary vitamins. They should cut down radically on the amount of bread, pastry, and sweets they consume and eat generously of cooked vegetables and of salads and green vegetables, and of all fruits in season. Soups of peas, beans, asparagus and celery are especially recommended. Two full glasses of orange juice a day are good medicine for chronic cold sufferers. The cheaper tomato juice, however, is just as healthful. And the inexpensive cabbage is mighty good food.

College-Trained Girls Seek Domestic Service

A few years ago college-bred girls would have disdained domestic service. The depression has changed that—to some extent at least. Some of them are willing to try their hands at anything to make an honest living.

So it is that the Y. W. C. A. of Orange, N. J., has begun a new venture. Under the direction of Miss Anna Davis, general secretary of the local branch, unemployed young women of high school or college education, will be used to supply the demand for cooks, housekeepers, nursemaids, and companions to elderly persons.

"From time to time," said Miss Davis, "young women, educated for a business career, but unable to find work, have told us they would take any respectable job, even though it entailed working in homes as cooks, nurses, or companions."

An investigation disclosed that there was a shortage of efficient domestic workers. A new bureau established by the Y. W. C. A. will serve as an employment-contact agency, and all negotiations will be carried on secretly.—Literary Digest.

HAYFIELD FAN URGES NEW COUNTY BASKETBALL SET-UP

Hayfield, Iowa, March 20, 1935

Boys High School basket ball games for the season of 1934-35 are over or will be Saturday night when the State Championship team will be named at Cedar Falls.

Basket ball is a great game both for the players and also from a spectators standpoint and we believe it is growing in popularity each year.

As a basket ball fan of many years standing, we have been wondering just how many are really satisfied with the present arrangement under which the Hancock County basket ball tournament is arranged and played.

Hancock County has nine High Schools that compete in the tourni - ment: Klemme, Goodell, Kanawha, Corwith, Woden, Crystal Lake, and Hayfield, all members of the Seven Eagles Conference; and the two largest high schools in the county Garner and Britt.

During the past several years either Garner of Britt have won the County tournament. Due to their location and gym facilities the tournament is always held at Garner or Britt and probably will be for years to come. However, we believe that due to their large enrollment and the great advantage of playing on their own floor that these two schools should play their B team in the County meet, as is done in many other places.

Either one of these schools have more men out for basketball than are enrolled in some of the small High Schools of the county and if the Coach and squad knew in advance that the B squad would represent the school in the county meet they would have something to work for and eventually I believe it would prove beneficial to all concerned.

The Seven Eagles Conference is a well matched Conference as in the four years since its organization four different schools have won the championship and we believe that either Garner or Britt could put out a B squad that would show well against these teams.

Hayfield won what was, I believe, the first Hancock County tournament in 1921 and has at various times defeated every school team in the county, but in a tournament a small squad of 5 or 7 men can not play four games in two days and keep the pace that is set by a ten man squad.

We have always looked on High School sports as a sport and not a vital part of a boys education, but in the interest of sportsmanship and fair play we believe that an arrangement similar to the one outlined above would meet with the approval of hundreds of Hancock county basket ball fans.

A loyal fan,
A. C. Taylor, Hayfield, Ia.

MISS ADELA SCHROEDER AND GIRL STUDENTS BROADCAST

Miss Adela Schroeder, who teaches at Bondurant, directed four of her girls in a play, which they broadcast from Ames last Friday at noon. Her home economic freshman girls have been studying Family Relationship and Personality Development, and two of the girls, Miss Gladys Henderson and Lita Efnor, wrote a three act play from this subject. They called the play, Phyllico Personality Project, and they enacted the play from the broadcasting station at Ames Friday at noon. Mrs. Lena Schroeder, Mrs. Pavey, Mrs. Henry Barz and Mrs. Albert Barz all tuned in and thoroughly enjoyed the play. Miss Schroeder's voice was just as natural as though she had been in the room speaking directly to them.

Saturday, March 16, 1935 was the Fiftieth of Golden Wedding Anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Taalkeus Blank, of Klemme, which was observed by a having a big family gathering and dinner at the home Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Blank were married at Bunde Ostfriesland, Germany March 16, 1885 and came to America in 1886 to make their home, settling first at Belmond, Iowa, where they lived until October 1st, 1891 and then moved to Hayfield whre they resided for four years. Their next move was to Klemme in 1895 when they purchased a tract of land in southwest Klemme from H. J. Klemme, and which has been their home ever since.

Mr. Blank had followed railroading for a great many years and a few years ago was retired from the service. Mr. Blank passed railroading along to his sons and each of them followed some branch of the service.

Mr. and Mrs. Blank have always taken a deep interest in the welfare of the community, it's schools, churches and government. Mr. Blank served on the town council for a number of years and was always an active member.

Those who helped Mr. and Mrs. Blank celebrate their Golden Wedding Anniversary were: Mr. Leppo Blank, Grace, Elso and Ralph; Mrs. Katie Mauss and Mr. and Mrs. Met Asmans and son of Rake; Mrs. Thomas Blank and Mrs and Mrs. Chet Geddes of Hayfield; Mr. and Mrs. Henry Kamp of Belmond; Mrs. Tom Goodridge and Mr. and Mrs. Chuck Lloyd of Cedar Rapids: Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Lau of Klemme; Mr. and Mrs. Anton Ahrenkeil and Taalkeus of Goodell; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Blank of Rock Island. All of Mr. and Mrs. Blank's Klemme friends unite in extending them congratulations and best wishes.

PRESENT FACULTY RE-ELECTED FOR ANOTHER YEAR

At their annual meeting held Monday evening the Klemme school board re-organized and swore in the new member, C. A. Larsen, recently elected to take the place of J. N. Day whose term had expired.

Along with other business the Board re-elected all of the present faculty of both the grade and high school. They are Supt. D. L. Hunter Principal Agnes Galbreth, A. L. Kingery, Sylvia Arends and Georga Ford in the high school and junior high departments. Norma Barz 5th and 6th grade; Florence Wilson, 3rd and 4th grade; and Ruth Thorne, primary and 2nd grade.

Patrons of the school are well satisfied with the work done by the teachers and many feel that the school has made fine progress during the past year. One member of the board stated that he had not heard of a single complaint regarding any teacher this past year. Klemme has a fine group of teachers and patrons of the school would be pleased to have them sign contracts for another year.

URGES IMMEDIATE SIGNING OF CORN-HOG APPLICATIONS

With the deadline for signing corn-hog contracts only a few days in the future, Ben V. Greiman, county chairman urging all farmers who expect to sign corn-hog contracts and have not done so to get in touch with their local committeeman.

Such action will speed up the local part of the program. April 1 has been set as dealine for signing applications by the Corn-Hog Section in Washington and the state committee.

Township committeemen will contact farmers who have not signed contracts as they do the appraisal work on corn land of farms under contract. Bad roads, however, have delayed appraisal work and it is possible that the township committees will not be able to make the rounds before April 1. For that reason producers are urged to see that committee and draw up their applications.

About 1600 contracts have been signed in Hancock County with quite a number yet to sign. Last year 1850 contracts were signed. The total this year is not expected to quite equal that of last year because of many cases in which two farms under separate contract last year will be under one contract this year.

SEED LOAN BILL TOO LATE TO HELP WITH OATS SEEDING

In answer to many inquiries concerning how soon seed loans can be secured S J Oberhauser, county agent, explained that while Congress is still working on this measure, loans will not be available to Iowa farmers in time to buy seed oats this spring.

Mr. Oberhauser suggests that farmers intending to plant oats this spring make other arrangements for financing their seed purchases and not depend on the federal seed and crop loan. Many will be able to secure credit through the Production Credit Association, the local bank or other financial institution or from their landlords. In some cases the delayed seed loan may necessitate a change in cropping plans.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT PLANS WOULD READJUST CURRENCY STRUCTURE OF NATION.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY MORGENTHAU revealed plans to dip into profits from gold seizure to retire $674,625,630 of the national debt through the use of gold certificates. Potentially inflationary, it will deprive national banks of the power to issue currency and save the government an annual interest charge of $13,500,000. Questions on inflationary implications were avoided by treasury officials, but they admitted the plan would "put gold back to work which can be expanded."

Secretary Morgenthau

The maneuver will place in the hands of the federal reserve banks $674,625,630 of gold certificates, which must be used as backing for issue of the same sum in federal reserve notes to retire the bonds. Note issue against the bonds could be expanded if currency demands warranted, to about $1,687,500,000, since a federal reserve note need not be backed by more than 40 per cent gold or gold certificates in like percentage. What will happeu will be the immediate simplification of our currency system. The treasury and federal reserve banks will have all the authority to issue money. The plan involves retirement on August 1 of $674,625,630 of 2 per cent federal securities and substitution of federal reserve notes for $657,937,080 of outstanding national bank currency. These bonds will be retired with surplus funds created by devaluing the Roosevelt dollar from 100 cents to 59.06 cents, gold. The total profit was $2,812,000,000.

National bank notes issued by national banks against federal securities represent more than one-tenth of the nation's circulating currency. The administration's program likely means the permanent abandonment of the national bank note which has been used since the Civil war. The circulation privileges expire on all bonds deposited by banks and held in trust by the treasury on July 22, 1935, except on two issues. By calling for redemption, the treasury will retire all securities bearing "circulation privilege" and national banks will no longer have suitable security for issuance of their own notes.

THE Mendieta administration in Cuba has established a military dictatorship over the island, constitutional law has been suspended, the death penalty for rebels imposed, and military governors designated for Havana and provinces. Washington is watching the situation with keen interest. Bombings and rioting are increasing, according to reports, with ten dead and fifteen injured. The objectives of the opponents of the government is the removal from office of President Mendieta and Colonel Fulgencio Batista, chief of the army. The strike has become almost general, nearly paralyzing all activities in the island. Repressive measures taken by the government to quell the strikers strongly resemble the strong-arm methods prevalent in the Machado regime, according to observers.

THE senate passed the army appropriation bill, and it now goes to the house. The measure adds $20,000,000 to the original bill, making the total appropriation of $400,000,000 almost a record high, and will add 46,250 to our army strength, making the total of enlisted men 165,000. Warm talk flowed freely as the senate debated the measure. Senator Lewis said that conflict might come between Russia and Japan and he asked: "With the army of Russia and the navy of Japan, where do we stand?" Senator McAdoo also speaking in favor of the bill said:

"Unless we want to continue to be a boob nation, we will not hesitate to make this increase in the army. It is justified by the wisdom and the necessities of national defense."

THREE Illinois farmers refused to tell the government census takers how much their farms were worth and how heavily they were mortgaged, claiming such information was none of the government's business. The trio were arrested and held for a grand jury, charged with violating the census act.

THE $4,880,000,000 relief bill was again returned to the senate marked "Rush!". There was no rush. Reports were that enough senators who had voted for the prevailing wage clause had been won over to the administration views to insure passage, but the bill, as revised by the committee, did not come up. Senator Long's one-man filibuster, the army bill, and other matters claimed the attention of the august senators, and the light was delayed. Harry Hopkins, federal relief administrator, said 20,500,000 persons were on relief, but expressed the belief that employment was increasing. He explained the apparent discrepancy by adding that many persons who had hitherto taken care of themselves have finally exhausted their resources. As the relief measure faced the start of its sixth week of debate, Long threatened fresh delays by trying to force a senate test of his proposed investigation of Farley, and administration leaders prepared to resort to drastic measures if the Kingfish attempts to hold the floor by "trying" his case in the senate after the adverse committee report. Senator Glass, chairman of the appropriations committee, is prepared to ask for early action on his amendment to the senate rules to prohibit a senator from talking on extraneous matters while an appropriation bill is pending.

AFTER twenty months of bargaining, the documents conveying full title to the Chinese Eastern railway to Manchukuo were initialed in Tokyo, thus eliminating Russia as a factor in Manchukuo. The written approval of the agreements was signed by Koki Hirota, Japanese foreign minister; Dr. Constantine Youreneff, Soviet ambassador to Japan; and by Gen. Ting Shih-Yuan, Manchukuoan minister of finance. The consideration was 140,000,000 yen, or about $39,300,000. The documents require that all three governments approve them before their formal signing about March 23. Thus is ended forty years of Russo-Japanese contention for domination.

A NEW gold suit is menacing administration financing and money policies. The suit reopening the question of investors' claims for payment of 1,800 million dollars of government bonds in gold or an equivalent, is brought by Robert A. Taft, son of the late chief justice, over the sum of $1.07. Taft demands either payment of bonds in gold or suspension of all refunding of the gold clause certificates. Before going to court, Taft presented to the treasury a $50 gold clause Liberty bond and four $1.07 interest coupons attached, and demanded gold for both, but was refused. The suit may force the administration to close the loopholes left by the Supreme court decisions, if that is possible.

THAT "ancient repository of dignity," the senate, has ben treated to an exhibition of personalities, vituperation, barely avoided fistic encounters, and general uproar centering about Senator Long that should set a record for even that august body. Goaded into action by the almost daily tirades of Louisiana's Kingfish, majority leader, Joe Robinson of Arkansas arose white with rage and let loose a castigation designed to blast the irrepressible Long into submission. Robinson appealed to the senate to assert itself and put Long, whom he called "a madman," in his place. Vice President Garner and more than a dozen senators shook hands with Robinson when he closed, and galleries applauded until the chair threatened to clear them. It had no perceptible effect on Long other than to cause him to rush back to the senate chamber, and renew his attack on Robinson.

Senator Robinson

The next day Huey precipitated another verbal free-for-all when he resumed his one-man campaign against Postmaster General Farley and the New Deal in general. Long charged that Farley was instrumental in quashing an indictment against a bank in which Norman Davis, "ambassador at large," was interested. For his trouble Kingfish received a liberal supply of ridicule. He also sent to the senate post office committee a letter in which the accusation was made that Farley is "profiting" from 25 business concerns in New York city, involving violation of four criminal statutes. When questioned, Farley said he had no statement to make.

Long's uncomplimentary remarks about Farley generally came to naught, as the post offices and post roads committee blocked the Kingfish, holding that "he had not produced facts or evidence constituting a proper case for investigation."

THE bill to repeal the pink slip publicity provision of the 1934 income tax law passed the house by a large majority of 302 to 98. The resolution apparently will win in the senate where a poll has shown it will be adopted by a close vote. Sentiment for repeal of the "snooper" clause has been growing, and there is no indication that the President will oppose the measure.

THE Greek revolt has been crushed, according to government reports, and preparations are being made for an attack on the island of Crete, held by former Premier Venizelos, leader of the insurrection. General Kondylis, in charge of army operations in Macedonia, was reported returning to Athens, after routing the rebels from their principal strongholds in Macedonia. It has been indicated that Venizelos has accepted defeat in Macedonia and Thrace and will proclaim Crete a separate state.

BY A vote of 23 to 1 the house ways and means committee approved the Vinson bonus bill, and gave the rival Patman bill a possible edge. The committee instructed Chairman Doughton to ask a wide open rule permitting inflationists to move the Patman measure as a substitute on the floor. Patman supporters claim the house will pass the first bonus bill brought up, but conservatives are working to jockey the "printing press money" measure out of preferred position. The Vinson bill is favored by the American Legion.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, jurist, scholar, soldier and gentleman, is dead. Two days before his ninety-fourth birthday, the beloved "great dissenter" succumbed to the ravages of pneumonia. The next day in the somber Supreme court chamber, the court led by Chief Justice Hughes paid tribute to the man whose career, he said, had been one of "unique distinction." Justice Hughes' voice choked as he spoke. The grind of legislation and the disputes of the day were forgotten in congress as both house and senate paused while glowing words were said in memory of the retired justice. Funeral services were held in Washington, attended by the President and Mrs Roosevelt, and members of the Supreme court. After the ceremony, Holmes was given military burial in Arlington National cemetery, as befitted one who had served his nation so gallantly. Justice Holmes was born in Boston, the son of the noted American poet of the same name. He entered Harvard and was in his senior year when the Civil war began. He enlisted as a lieutenant, was promoted to a captaincy and retired with the rank of colonel. He was wounded three times. After the war he returned to school and obtained his law degree. In 1882, Holmes was elevated to the Supreme court of Massachusetts, and in 1902, President Roosevelt appointed him to the United States Supreme court. On October 4, 1928, when he was eighty-seven years old, he became the oldest man ever to sit on the bench of the Supreme court. He retired in January, 1932.

SENATE administration leaders have decided to virtually abolish NRA when it expires in June, and set up in its place a plan of self-government in business, eliminating present coercive measures, and giving over administrative functions of the new program to the federal trade commission. Thus would end one of the administration's most spectacular and far-reaching experiments. In its general form, the plan calls for permission to join in voluntary codes regulating trade practices and eliminating unfair competition. Price fixing will be outlawed. Business and industry will agree to minimum wages and maximum hours, and only when these standards are violated, can the government apply compulsory codes.

At the same time United States District Judge W. G. Borah, in New Orleans, denied a government petition to compel a box manufacturer to comply with the maximum hour and minimum wage provisions of the lumber code, ruling that the national industrial recovery act is unconstitutional. The ruling is expected to bring before the United States Supreme court the constitutionality of the interstate commerce clause of the lumber code.

KOKI HIROTA, Japanese foreign minister, sees in the dispute over settlement of Japanese farmers in Arizona, a spark which may ignite flames of discontent and cause regrettable consequences between Japan and the United States, he told the lower house of the Japanese diet. He expressed extreme regret that American authorities had not been able to settle the matter, and said he was pressing for an early solution. Exclusion of the Japanese has been asked under the alien land ownership law, and it is probable that no fundamental solution can be arrived at until the exclusion clause of the immigration act, which has been hanging fire since 1924 has been settled.

S. CLAY WILLIAMS, head of the NRA, tendered his resignation to the President, starting what is expected to be a wholesale housecleaning of the recovery administration's high command. Chairman Williams explained his action by saying that he had to return to his job as head of one of the country's largest tobacco companies. Three of the four remaining members of the board, Arthur D. Whiteside, Walton Hamilton, and Sidney Hillman, are known to have their resignations ready. Rumors say that the President will not fill the vacancies, but will return the NRA to a one-man command.

MONEY markets of the world reacted violently after President Roosevelt declared his administration would seek further jacking up of commodity prices. Stocks rallied in New York, government bonds sagged, and the falling British pound rose four cents. The President hurriedly issued another statement explaining that his advocacy of higher prices did not mean further devaluation of the dollar, at least not for the present. The first statement was made by the President at a press conference when he was asked if he believed prices had now risen sufficiently to warrant stabilization. He replied that they had not; that they were still too low in relation to debts.

ITALIAN government officials state that nearly 1,000 aviators and several squadrons of planes have sailed for East Africa, and that a second wave of troops has been started to join the 20,000 already massed in Somaliland. General Graziana has been named governor of Somaliland and commander of the troops.

DEMONSTRATORS numbering approximately 2,000 marched into the Minnesota state capitol at St. Paul and harangued legislators with demands in behalf of the idle ranks. Threats were made to picket the capitol unless demands were met.

Find Comfort in Greece
The British Wake Up
New Civilization?
Fremont Older

Americans, with comparatively small troubles, may find comfort in reading about Greece, where government airplanes are bombing government battleships, seized by rebels. From the Averoff, pride of the Greek navy, "flames rose high" when a 250-pound baby bomb struck her deck. What would happen if a 5,000-pound bomb struck such a ship?

Arthur Brisbane

Ancient names taking you back to school days are scattered through Greek civil war reports. Venizelos, a true Greek patriot, supporting the revolution, dwells on the little island of Crete, where the Minotaur, half human, half bull, used to live and devour youths and maidens from Athens.

In this world of trouble, something must explode somewhere.

Ramsay MacDonald tells the commons that Germany's military activity compels Britain to extend her boundaries of "imperial air protection", to the banks of the Rhine. Armies of men mean nothing. Floating ships mean little. A while ago Lord Rothermere, warning his country usefully, as his brother, Lord Northcliffe, did in the big war, was telling the British that they must have at least 5,000 fighting planes. His advice, at first ridiculed, is now taken seriously and Britain will have the planes.

Old American methods that have built up this country, such as it is, are called out of date by leading minds in Washington.

Mr. Richberg, supposed to be closest to the President in thought, tells a Miami audience "the World war marked the passing of a civilization." What kind of civilization will take its place?

With all possible respect for professors and reformers, you wonder if they can, offhand, manufacture a better one.

The death at seventy-eight of Fremont Older, for more than fifty years a courageous, fighting newspaper man in California, recalls Victor Hugo's words: "The death of the just man is like the end of a beautiful day."

Fremont Older's life, character and work were worthy of his impressive stature and benign expression. It may be said of him, as was said of Gladstone, that "his heart was ever with the weak and miserable poor." Every good cause found a defender in him; the most miserable convict, released from prison, might find a friend in him. There is a heaven, of course, and Fremont Older is there. If there were no heaven, his character and merit would "make it necessary to invent one."

Alabama voted dry, stands with Kansas, one of the two dry states of the Union. Northern racketeers and bootleggers must not hastily conclude that Alabama offers a paradise of profit. First, Alabama knows how to make corn whisky at a price per gallon that would discourage any bootlegger; second, the men of Alabama are not as long suffering as men of New York. Racketeers would find Alabama is bad climate for their health.

Paris and American dressmakers tell woman that she must now dress in a fashion "revealing the outlines and curves of the human form." To know exactly what the outlines of the human form are, take a walk through the streets of Miami near public or private bathing beaches. You will see strolling to their homes, as free from care or self-consciousness as little birds, hundreds of ladies, some tall and thin, a majority short and fat, with literally nothing on from the waist up that could not be replaced by two half coconut shells fastened to the chest with a string around the back of the neck, and below the waist a wisp of material that would make Eve's skirt of leaves look like a ball dress.

Such costumes are unwise "salesmanship." The old-fashioned muslin dress down to the ankle, up to the neck, aroused romantic interest and uncertainty. The two half coconut shell costumes cause the eligible young man to say, "If that is all there is to it, I shall postpone matrimony."

On an island in the Pearl river, inhabitants of a Chinese fishing village dreaded and disliked a small settlement where 24 lepers lived nearby. A dispatch from Hongkong says the villagers have solved their problem by a massacre of the 24 lepers, followed by the destruction and burning of their settlement.

That shocks us now, but such barbarity was once the rule. The old were killed and sometimes eaten in primitive days.

British medical men declare positively that "drinking milk within two hours after eating meat is highly detrimental to the digestive system." Moses could have told them that long ago.

Test Strength of Wire Farm Fences

Cornell University Plans to Establish Test Yard on State Property.

By H. W. Riley, Department of Agricultural Engineering, Cornell University.
WNU Service.

Of all jobs on the farm, probably chasing stock and repairing fences are the most wasteful and exasperating. Many farmers complain that some fences on the market today are not as durable as old fences. Fences would not break so soon if they were made of heavy, durable wire and were well galvanized. Such fences, however, seem too expensive for many farmers if they are not sure of their durability.

The American society for testing materials has decided to test farm fencing and other galvanized wire products. A test yard will be set up in New York state on property of the college of agriculture. There many samples of farm fences will be exposed to the weather and carefully watched. Before they are erected, these fences will be completely analyzed, and as the years go by a careful record will be kept of the durability of each fence. The best fences will be clearly shown in a few years.

This society has already shown that the durability of steel against rusting is increased when from one-fifth to one-quarter per cent of copper is used in the steel. This copper is added to the steel as it lies in a molten pool in the open hearth furnace, and the additional cost is small enough to be disregarded.

Medium Fat Hog Is Best for Family Cuts of Pork

A 225-pound moderately fat hog produces the "family" size cuts of pork, says Prof. R. B. Hinman of the New York State College of Agriculture.

Such hogs, he adds, will yield hams and three-rib shoulders that weigh about sixteen pounds each, bacon strips and loins that weigh from ten to twelve pounds. These cuts, of desirable size to cure and store after smoking, may be cut into satisfactory economical slices or roasts for cooking. Heavier hogs normally produce a greater proportion of lard. They also produce bacon and hams that some families consider too fat.

Good quality, thrifty hogs normally produce the most desirable meat, Professor Hinman says. Precaution should be taken to see that all animals dressed are in a healthy condition.

Ice Needs on Farms

In parts of the country where natural ice suitable for storing is formed it is time to provide for next summer's needs. The Department of Agriculture has estimated that one-half ton of ice per cow will serve the dairyman to cool and hold cream at a safe temperature if delivered two or three times a week. However, if the whole milk is to be cooled the needs will be not less than a ton and a half per cow. These estimates were made presuming that both ice house and cooling tanks are in good condition. If more than 30 per cent of the ice is lost by melting the amount stored will have to be increased accordingly. The average family needs between five and ten tons per season even when the ice is used sparingly.

Trees on Line

Trees standing on a boundary line belong to respective owners of both sides as tenants in common and although it is asserted in one case that when a tree stands on a boundary line the landowner on either side has the right to lop off limbs and roots on his side close to the trunk, yet it has been more recently declared in several other cases that either owner may not destroy the boundary line tree without the other's consent, and if he does the other owner may recover damages against him. The adjoining landowner would have no jurisdiction over any tree not on the line nor on his own land.—Indiana Farmer's Guide.

Siamese Monarch Renounces Throne

Prajadhipok Will Reside on English Estate

King Prajadhipok of Siam and his queen, who are no longer rulers of their tiny kingdom. The king, now residing in Surrey, England, announced his abdication following months of internal disputes over governmental matters of Siam. It was hinted, however, that the king would return to his throne only if the government recants and makes an about face on Prajadhipok's demand for trial in an ordinary court for persons suspected of opposition to the government.

Eleven-year-old Prince Ananda, nephew of Prajadhipok, has accepted the invitation to mount the vacant throne, according to an announcement from Bangkok. The prince has been living in Switzerland while attending an exclusive school. Born in Europe, he lived for a time at Cambridge, Mass., while his father was attending Harvard medical school.

A regency will govern Siam until Ananda's majority.

Seek Overthrow of Greek Government

IN THE NEWS—1. Scenes of disorder in Greece follow attempt of rebels to overthrow government. 2—Federal Judge J. P. Nields rules Section 7-A of NRA unconstitutional. 3—Babe Ruth goes to Boston Braves as assistant manager.

Army Presses Forward to Crush Rebels

Troops Capture Town After Battle in Mud

Scenes such as this took place in Athens when insurrectionists attempted to overthrow the Greek government. The rebels under the alleged leadership of ex-Premier Venizelos were reported to have suffered heavy losses in engagements with loyalist troops.

The Greek government reported that they had recaptured the town of Seres, northeast of Saloniki, after a hard fight, and were pressing forward to crush the last vestiges of the rebellion. A heavy artillery bombardment drove the insurgents from their positions with heavy losses, it is said.

Tension increased in Europe as Bulgaria and Turkey massed troops on their frontiers, although they insisted their action was only as a protective measure. Turkey has 80,000 men stationed near the Greek and Bulgarian boundaries, and preparations have been going on for more than a month, it is said. France has ordered a destroyer to proceed to Athens to protect French property, and Great Britain has also ordered a battleship to speed to Phaleron bay.

Venizelos is reported as ready to flee from Crete, headquarters of the revolutionists, and seek refuge in Alexandria, Egypt, and the Jugoslavia government has acceded to a request of Greek authorities to hold Gen. Nicholas Plastiras, veteran Greek revolutionary leader, if he should attempt to cross into Greece by way of the Jugoslavia frontier.

Ten Millions Spent in 38 States, Ickes Reports.

Washington.—More than $10,000,000 worth of school buildings have been completed in 38 states with the aid of PWA loans and grants, Secretary of the Interior Ickes announced. Hundreds of additional school are being constructed and will be ready for occupation by fall. Ickes said this program was woefully inadequate. He held out hope for approval of a $630,000,000 school building program this year, if congress approves the President's work-relief program.

The girls undercut the tree with an ax, and then felled it with a crosscut saw. Their feat further disproves the old term of the "weaker sex" and the ancient's contention about "woman's place is in the home."

CHURCH LOYALTY CRUSADE GAINS MOMENTUM

The United Church Loyalty Crusade which is under way in churches of every denomination over the entire state of Iowa is far surpassing the expectations of even the most optomistic. Reports indicate that many churchs are being filled to their capacity at the morning service and a great increase in attendance is recorded everywhere. Goals which were thought to be high are being surpassed like records at a college field meet. Pastors are reporting from every quarter the great number of women and men present at these two special services for them.

The local Methodist church had another "red letter" day last Sunday. Even though many farmers were not able to get out of their own yards, yet the number of men present last Sunday was a surprise to many and old man "Can't" got another severe blow.

The Epworth League that had for its goal 40, surpassed that a week ago and reached its next goal of 50 last Sunday. We dare not attempt to predict the number that will be present next Sunday. A most interesting Bible Study is being conducted and all young people of High School age and over are invited to come.

Next Sunday, March 24th, is "Family Day". With weather permitting we are expecting the largest yet present at both the worship service and the Sunday Scho'. Bring the whole family next Sunday all the children babies, and the rest and sit together in church. Who will have the largest family? What family will have the greatest combined age? Who will come the farthest to church. Come Sundy morning at 10 o'clock and see.

FOREIGN BUTTER SHIPPTD IN

Buttermaker Paul Mueller received figures that may be of interest to dairymen. The report shows that the week ending on March 13th there arrived in the United States from foreign markets 45, 621 packages of butter which comprised the largest six-day total yet received, approximating 2,708,552 pounds or 42,993 tubs of 63 pounds each. This can be compared to the import for the entire month of January with a total of 329,730 pounds.

DUCKS EXTINCT IN 5 YEARS?

New Orleans, La.—Dr. Harry C. Oberholser, biologist of the department of agriculture, believes wild ducks in America will become extinct within five years unless drastic steps are taken to protect them from natural disaster and slaughter by hunters.

Dr. Oberholser, touring the nation to warn states of the "impending extinction," cited recent drought in the United States and southern and central Canada as heavy blows to the wild fowl.

SHAMROCK BLARNEY

The seniors, with the help of Miss Galbreth, have gathered the material for the Squealer this week and we hope you enjoy it.

We seniors will begin practicing on our class play "Sound Your Horn" next week. The play is a three-act comedy and will be presented the week after Easter.

Supt. J. R. Baggs was down the other day and has asked Franklin Kluckhohn to give his declamatory selection before the contestants of the county spelling contest which will be held on Saturday, March 23; which makes us very proud of our "Tiny."

Just for a "lark," the junior and seniors decided to have a party after the inter-class tournament on Thursday evening and the losing class was to serve a tasty lunch to the winners. Whereupon, the juniors walked away with the game and the "eats" were on us. A scavenger hunt and several games of volley ball were also enjoyed during the course of the evening.

EDITORIAL

Some students come to high school to have a good time, some come to labor industriously, while others come merely to pass the time away.

To me a combination of the above is most suitable. One can not only pass the time away but can increase his supply of knowledge also with a good time tucked in occasionally to relieve the monotony.

The attitude of passing time away should not be encouraged too much however, as it is inevitable anyway.

As seniors, we realize that the time has passed all too quickly and will no doubt find that our high school days will mean a great deal more to us as we grow older. In the years to come we can fully appreciate how much of a real opportunity our high school ducation has been.

NICKNAMES

Many of our high school students are blessed with nicknames by which they are known to all their friends. We thought that you might be interested in some of them, so we did a little research work and here they are:

Alvin Bachman "Red" or "Rote" (German for Red)—blessed with a flaming topnotch of red hair.

George Stokesbary "Urk"—Petie Kilgore's idea.

Graydon Back, "Curly"—his coiffure of many curls.

Melvin Schlei, "Slee"—A mispronounced last name.

Ruth Wollemeyer "Roofus"—Our Editor, or Bessie Larsons idea.

Glen Lewis, "Squanto"—The result of a Thanksgiving program and an Indian portrayal.

Elmer Jensen, "Martin"—Like father, like son.

Bessie Larson, "Chicken"—Because she is always squabbling over something such as news for the paper or library books.

Harold Kothenbeutal, "Beetle-Bottle"—The neat arrangement of his last name.

Lucille Stille, "Jim"—This name is given to her by a hired man.

Dolorys Cook, "Cooky"—the mere addition of a "y" to the last name.

Theodore Kaduce, "Ted"—The customary shortening of Theodore.

Melvin Jensen, "Fat"—You ought to have seen him at the age of one year.

Alida Schubert, "Toots"—This her father called her when she was a child.

Franklyn Buseman "Rusie"—This is shortening of Buseman.

Evert Barz "Windy"—This, Evert says, is what is he called during threshing.

Raymond Keeper, "Slug"—Raymond says he does not know where this name originated. (Editors note: We know the answer. His christening took place on Main Street one sunny noon in the fall of 1933.)

Paul Lau, "Slim"—This is caused by his height.

Leo Brinkman, "Louiy"—This Leo said he called himself once at scout meeting.

Franklin Kluckhohn, "Tiny"—This always has been his customary name.

Walter Klotzbach, "Kutz"—This is also a shortening of the last name.

La Vern Hammitt, "Sy"—The only explanation of this name will have to be gotten from LaVern Drake.

Jeanne Thada "Fada-waly"—This she is called by her girl friends.

Raymond Jorgenson, Jr., "Buster"—he has been called this ever since he has gone to school.

William Lemke, "Billy"—This has always been the shortening of William.

INTER-CLASS TOURNAMENT

The first battle of the inter-class tournament got under way Thursday noon with the freshmen and sophomores waging the battle. The freshmen went strong at first and showed evidence of defeating the sophomores, but in the last half the sophomores got a shooting spasm and turned victors by a score of 11 to 5.

The last two games of the inter-class tournament were played on Thursday night. The seniors and juniors played the first game in which the juniors were victorious. The seniors started out with a bang and led at the end of the first quarter 6 to 5. The juniors went on a shooting spree and led at the half 17 to 10. The final score was 39 to 14. In spite of the fact that we lost "we sure can take it."

The final game was the juniors vs. the sophomores. The juniors were again victorious, leading all the way through until the final score was 31 to 23.

INQUIRING REPORTER

Have You Enjoyed Going To K. H. S.? Why?

Yes, because there were many good timese that I enjoyed even though I had to do a great deal of hard studying. The teachers were always willing to help whenever they could as long as I was willing to cooperate with them. Now that my high school days are nearly over I sometimes feel sad to think of all the good times that are coming to an end. There were several times that I felt like quiting but thought of the future and kept on going and I'm sure I will never be sorry for doing so. I hope that others will enjoy it as much is I did—Loren Gast.

After four years of drudgery, worrying, hardship, walking in primitive mud, I have filled my "fun loving" soul with a life long ambition of coming to high school, where I have made my grades, thanks to the kind hearted teachers and am now ready to set forth to conquer the world. These last four years of school I have enjoyed the most of any school years I have had. One thing I really owe a lot to for my high school education is my faithful old Mode lT Ford. Miss Galbreth is heading this way so I must get to work before she says, "Half hour after school for you;" the usual procedure in my case.—Melvin Schlei.

Of course I enjoyed high school. Why not? Work never hurt anybody yet. Work is the last thought that enters my mind when I think of all the good times we've had together—at parties, treasure hunts, coasting, weiner roasts, and when we had our pictures taken; the "kick" we used to get out of picking seed corn and judging horses when we were sophomores. At the present time the main topic under discussion is "skip day", which will probably be our last good time together.—Lucille Stille.

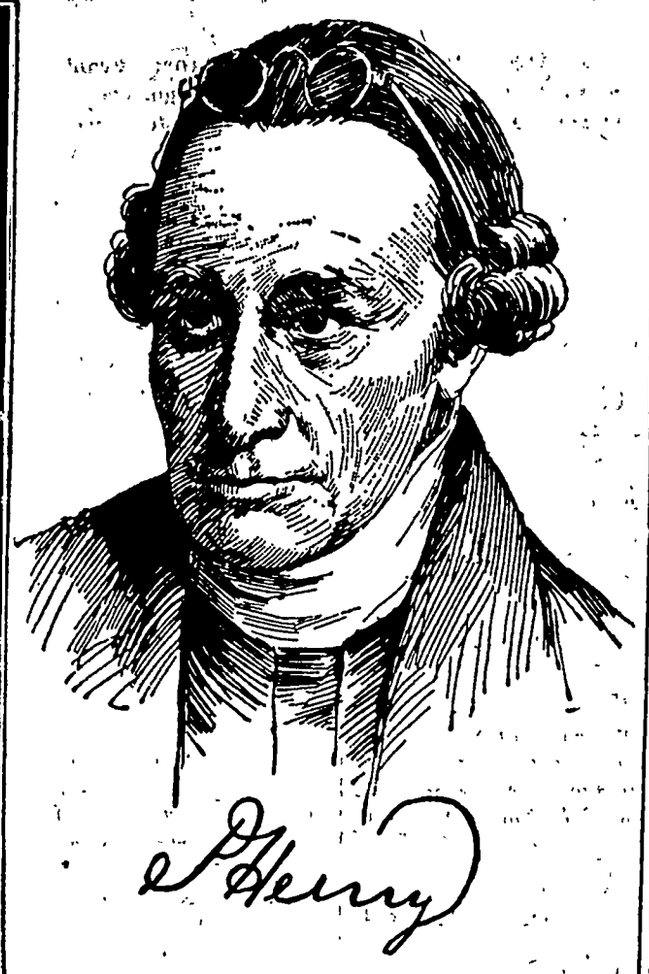
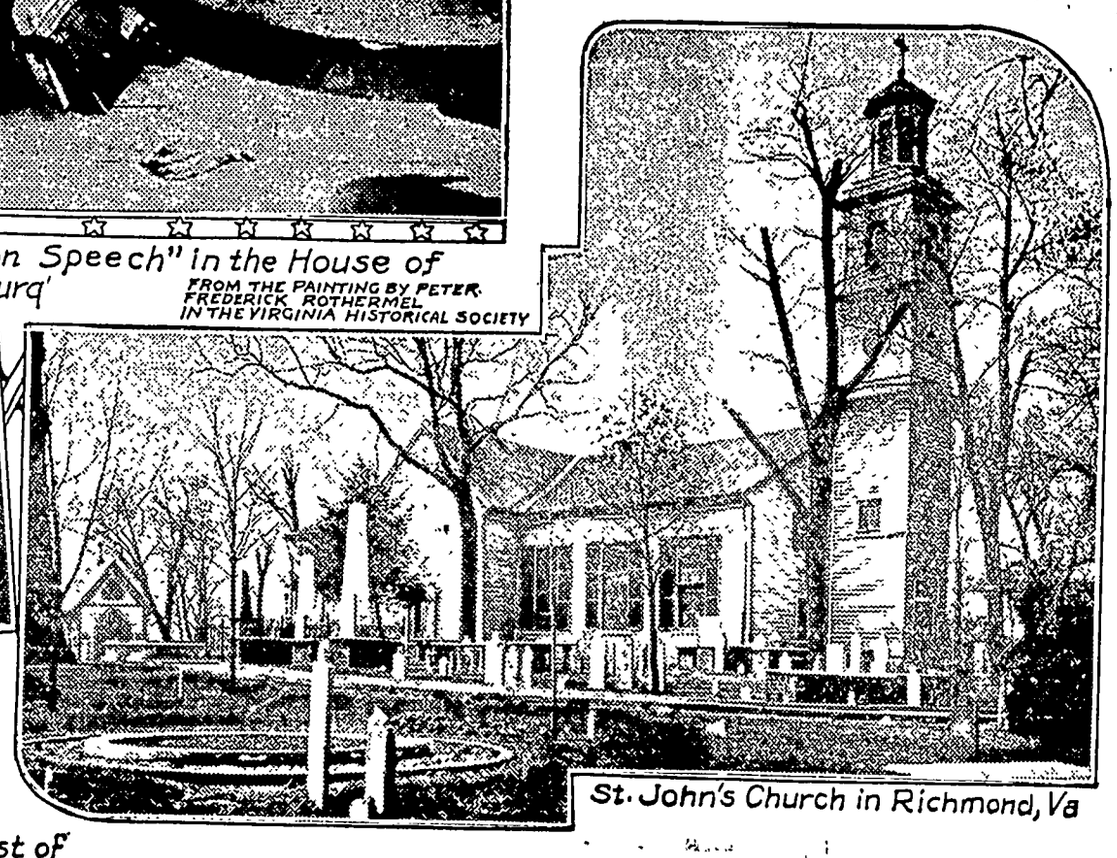
"Liberty or Death!"

Henry Making His "Treason Speech" in the House of Burgesses at Williamsburg

FROM THE PAINTING BY PETER FREDERICK ROTHERMEL IN THE VIRGINIA HISTORICAL SOCIETY



Patrick Henry



St. John's Church in Richmond, Va

Bust of Henry in the Hall of Fame at N. Y. U.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON MARCH 20, 1775, a group of Virginians gathered in old St. John's church in Richmond. They were delegates to a convention which in the future would be known as the "second revolutionary convention of Virginia," and they were assembled there in spite of the objections of Lord Dunmore, royal governor of the colony, to consider ways and means of safeguarding their liberties as British subjects. On March 23, Patrick Henry, a young lawyer from Hanover county, offered a resolution ending thus:

"Resolved, therefore, That this colony be immediately put into a posture of defense and that a committee prepare a plan for the embodying, arming, and disciplining such a number of men as may be sufficient for that purpose."

Henry then moved its immediate adoption. "This," says St. George Tucker, an eye-witness of the scene that historic day, "produced an animated debate, in which Colonel Richard Bland, Mr. Nicholas, the treasurer, and I think Colonel Harrison, of Berkeley, and Mr. Pendleton, were opposed to the resolution, as conceiving it to be premature." In opposing the resolution as "premature," these men, patriots though they were and devoted to the cause of liberty, were giving a convenient excuse for their opposition but one which probably was not the real reason. These men were conservatives and some of them, at least, considered Patrick Henry a "dangerous radical."

Ten years before, he had been elected to the house of Burgesses at Williamsburg and had gathered about him a group of younger men and men from the discontented frontier counties of the colony. In May, 1765, he had presented a series of resolutions condemning the Stamp tax which England had imposed upon her American colonies and these resolutions had resulted in a hot debate in which Henry had been opposed by Bland, Pendleton, Randolph, Wythe and other conservatives from the tidewater aristocracy.

It was during this debate that Henry had ended his speech with the words "Tarquin and Caesar each had his Brutus; Charles the First his Cromwell; and George the Third—" Here he paused and as the speaker and other members of the assembly cried out angrily: "Treason! Treason!" he had gone on—"may profit by their example. If this be treason, make the most of it!" Brave words, those—as were the words which he was about to utter in reply to the statement of the conservatives that his resolution of March 23, 1775, was "premature."

As a matter of fact, his resolution, rather than being premature, was tardy, when compared to action taken weeks and even months before this time by other colonies and even by some of the counties in Virginia which had already armed and begun drilling their men. But because this "dangerous radical" proposed it, these conservatives opposed it. The other factor involved, however, was this: the colonists had talked of the possibility of war with England but so far no public body in America had spoken of its inevitability and, in calling upon the convention to adopt his resolution, he was asking it virtually to declare war.

No wonder, then, that these conservatives should oppose it. They were prudent politicians; they did not see the necessity of taking such decisive action and for that we cannot blame them. After listening to the "animated debate" on his resolution, Henry arose and began:

"Mr. President, it is natural to man to indulge in illusions of hope. We are apt to shut our eyes against a painful truth and listen to the song of that siren till she transforms us into beasts. Is this the part of wise men, engaged in a great arduous struggle for liberty? Are we disposed to be of the number of those, who, having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not the things which so nearly concern their temporal salvation? For my part, whatever anguish of spirit it may cost, I am willing to know the whole truth; to know the worst and provide for it.

"I have but one lamp by which my feet are guided, and that is the lamp of experience. I know of no way of judging of the future, but by the past. And judging by the past, I wish to know what there has been in the conduct of the British ministry for the last ten years to justify those hopes with which gentlemen have been pleased to solace themselves and the house? Is it that insidious smile with which our petition has lately been received? Trust it not, sir. It will prove a snare to your feet. Suffer not yourselves to be betrayed with a kiss.

"Ask yourself how this gracious reception of our petition comports with these warlike preparations which cover our waters and darken our land. Are fleets and armies necessary to a work of love and reconciliation? Have we shown ourselves so unwilling to be reconciled that force must be called in to win back our love? Let us not deceive ourselves, sir. These are implements of war and subjugation; the last arguments to which kings resort. I ask gentlemen, sir, what means this martial array, if its purpose be not to force us to submission? Can gentlemen assign any other possible motive for it? Has Great Britain any enemy in this quarter of the world to call for all this accumulation of navies and armies? No sir, she has none. They are meant for us; they can be meant for no other. They are sent over to bind and rivet upon us those chains which the British ministry have been so long forging. And what have we to oppose to them? Shall we try argument? Sir, we have been trying that for the last ten years. Have we anything new to offer upon the subject? Nothing. We have held the subject up in every light of which it is capable; but it has been all in vain. Shall we resort to entreaty and humble supplication? What terms shall we find which have not been already exhausted? Let us not, I beseech you, sir, deceive ourselves longer.

"Sir, we have done everything that could be done to avert the storm which is now coming on. We have petitioned; we have remonstrated; we have supplicated; we have prostrated ourselves before the throne and have implored its interposition to arrest the tyrannical hands of the ministry and parliament. Our petitions have been slighted; our remonstrances have produced additional violence and insult; our supplications have been disregarded, and we have been spurned with contempt from the foot of the throne! In vain, after these things, may we indulge the fond hope of peace and reconciliation. There is no longer any room for hope. If we wish to be free—if we mean to preserve inviolate those inestimable privileges for which we have been so long contending—if we mean not basely to abandon the noble struggle in which we have been so long engaged and which we have pledged ourselves never to abandon until the glorious object of our contest shall be obtained—we must fight! I repeat it, sir, we must fight! An appeal to arms and to the God of Hosts is all that is left us!"

It is easy to imagine the intensity of that moment in the little white-painted Richmond church as Patrick Henry's fellow-Virginians listened to him utter the words whch they knew in their hearts were true but which, so far, they had been unable to bring themselves to use—"We must fight! I repeat it, sir—we must fight!" Up to this time, according to the eye-witness already quoted, Henry had spoken with great calmness and restraint. But now, as he drew near the conclusion of his speech, his passionate earnestness mounted to this stirring climax:

"They tell us, sir, that we are weak; unable to cope with so formidable an adversary. But when shall we be stronger? Will it be next week, or the next year? Will it be when we are totally disarmed, and when a British guard shall be stationed in every house? Shall we acquire the means of effectual resistance by lying supinely on our back and hugging the delusive phantom of hope, until our enemies shall have bound us hand and foot? Sir, we are not weak, if we make a proper use of these means which the God of nature hath placed in our power. Three millions of people, armed in the holy cause of liberty, and in such a country as that which we possess, are invincible by any force which our enemy can send against us. Besides, sir, we shall not fight our battles alone. There is a just God who presides over the destinies of nations, and who will raise up friends to fight our battles for us. The battle, sir, is not to the strong alone; it is to the vigilant, the active, the brave. Besides, sir, we have no election. If we were base enough to desire it, it is now too late to retire from the contest. There is no retreat but in submission and slavery! Our chains are forged! Their clanking may be heard on the plains of Boston! The war is inevitable—and let it come! I repeat, sir, let it come.

"It is in vain, sir, to extenuate the matter. Gentlemen may cry, 'Peace, peace,' but there is no peace. The war is actually begun! The next gale that sweeps from the North will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms! Our brethren are already in the field! Why stand we here idle? What is it the gentlemen wish? What would they have? Is life so dear, or peace so sweet, as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery? Forbid it, Almighty God! I know not what course others may take; but as for me, give me liberty or give me death!"

Such was the speech which, according to one of Henry's biographers (Moses Coit Tyler in the "American Statesmen" series, published by the Houghton Mifflin company), "has been committed to memory and declaimed by several generations of American schoolboys, and is now perhaps familiarly known to a larger number of the American people than any other considerable bit of secular prose in our language. The old church at Richmond, in which he made this marvelous speech, is in our time visited every year, as a patriotic shrine, by thousands of pilgrims, who seek curiously the very spot upon the floor where the orator is believed to have stood when he uttered those words of flame. It is chiefly the tradition of that one speech which today keeps alive, in millions of homes, the name of Patrick Henry and which lifts him, in the popular faith, almost to the rank of some mythical hero of romance."

POULTRY

SANITATION CHECKS CHICK COCCIDIOSIS

Trouble Starts From Eating Eggs of Parasite.

By H. C. Gauger, Instructor in Poultry Science, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Although no cure has been found for chick coccidiosis, a particularly destructive disease, it may be prevented when proper sanitation steps are taken.

The parasites which cause the disease are usually present wherever there is any poultry, but older birds sometimes harbor the parasites without suffering any serious ill effects. It is the chick between four and twelve weeks of age that suffers most.

Infection starts when a chick eats the microscopic eggs of the parasite. The eggs break open in the intestines of the chicks and release myriads of living bodies which attack the mucus membranes.

Infected chicks are weak, listless, and droopy. The appetite is gone and they huddle in groups as though they are cold. There is usually a whitish, watery dropping which has a tendency to paste up the fluff around the tail.

Chicks should not be allowed to eat the parasite's eggs. The brooder houses should be kept sanitary and every precaution taken to keep the eggs from being tracked into the houses from other places.

Infected chicks should be removed immediately from the flock and killed and either burned or buried deeply. The litter and sand in brooder houses should be changed every other day or oftener. Only fresh, clean material should be used for litter.

While the chicks are in the brooder house, the runways should be prepared by spading or plowing the soil so as to turn the infected top soil under. If this is impracticable, the chicks should be restricted to a limited area which can be covered with sand or gravel, or they should be confined to an outdoor, wire-floor sun porch until ten or twelve weeks old.

Culling Hens Good Way to Get Vigorous Flock

When culling the flock keep hens that are strong, healthy, vigorous, with short, neat heads and strong beaks; hens with long, deep, rectangular bodies; hens with dusty, well worn feathers, but having a bright, healthy look; hens with large, bright eyes, active appearance, and short, well-worn toe nails; hens that molt late and those that molt rapidly—keep those in particular that molt and lay at the same time, or that do not stop laying when molting; keep the noisy, happy, friendly hens that rise early and go to roost late; vigorous hens with pale beaks and shanks, with thin pelvic bones; keep early hatched, well-grown pullets.

Cull hens that are old, or that are poor layers; cull cripples, those with broken down abdomens; cull the sick quiet, inactive hens that loaf around on the roosts; cull the "crow heads" with long, slim heads and beaks, and those with large coarse heads with sunken eyes; cull all under-sized pullets, the early molters, the persistent sitters, and hens with bad habits such as cannibals, egg-eaters, and feather-pullers.—Missouri Farmer.

Checking Egg-Eating Habit

All sorts of disagreeable substances have been used to fill an egg shell to check egg-eating—red pepper, aloes, mustard, vinegar, etc., but without much success. Now and then a hen may be "taught a lesson," but the rule is that the psychology of hens does not grasp the idea of such punishment. They may get a dose one day and try their same egg-eating trick the next. Perhaps if one kept at it long enough the hens might see the point, but that is not practical. Possibly only one or two hens are the culprits. Yellow marks on their beaks will tell this, and those individuals can be discontinued. Otherwise the remedy is putting the nests in dark spots and gathering the eggs frequently.—Rural New-Yorker

Scaly Leg

Scaly leg of chickens is most often found with older hens. This ailment, observes a writer in the Wisconsin Agriculturist, is caused by a tiny mite and can be checked by first washing the legs in warm soapy water, then dipping them for a few seconds in kerosene. Do not leave them in the kerosene too long as it is too harsh a treatment then. Sulphur ointment is another remedy which has proved helpful, according to statements by some poultrymen.

Wild Birds Propagated

For the first time in history, prairie chickens were successfully propagated under artificial conditions at Pittsburg, Kan., last year. In previous attempts, the young birds always succumbed to disease. At the Kansas game farm, the eggs were hatched in a surgically sterilized incubator, and then carefully protected from domestic poultry disease. A diet consisting largely of grasshoppers is believed to have been a big factor in growing the young birds successfully to maturity.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Most observers and thinking citizens have been inclined to take little stock in the talks of Huey Long and Father Coughlin, the radio priest, concerning plans for redistribution of wealth. The consensus has been that their plans sooner or later would fall of their own weight. But it can be denied no longer that Long and Coughlin have developed a gigantic following of people who lack information as to the fallacies of the arguments, however logical they sound, that have been spread by these politically smart showmen.

Long and Coughlin

One reason that serious attention to their proposals is now necessary is that some of their arguments are being advanced from high places in the federal government. I refer specifically to the testimony before the house committee on banking and currency by Marriner S. Eccles, governor of the Federal Reserve board and as such the titular head of the nation's banking system. Mr. Eccles did not quite take a leaf out of Huey Long's book. He approached the position of the Louisiana senator, however, when he proposed a redistribution of income, whereas Senator Long has urged a redistribution of wealth.

Mr. Eccles suggested in his testimony in effect that it would be all right for a man with say ten million dollars in capital to keep that sum, provided his income was redistributed. Mr. Eccles went back to the days immediately following the World war to illustrate his argument and showed that at the top of the post-war boom "one tenth of one per cent of the families at the top of the income received as much as 42 per cent of the families at the bottom of the list." Furthermore, he said that the single average family in the big income class got as much as four hundred families at the bottom of the income list.

"This one-tenth of 1 per cent was unable to use all the income in consumption," he continued. "They therefore had to find an outlet in the investment field. As a result, the capacity to produce increased out of all proportion to the capacity to consume."

So Mr. Eccles took the position that a solution of the depression was a redistribution of this income with the idea that it would increase purchasing power in the lower brackets. The governor offered no explanation of how those in the lower income class were going to obtain possession of the redistributed income of the rich because his argument stopped at the point where the government would take this money by taxation.

That is the recognized weakness of the programs advanced by Senator Long and Father Coughlin, and Governor Eccles showed no ability to solve the problem.

On top of the outbursts by Long and Coughlin and the serious testimony by Governor Eccles comes Senator Nye the North Dakota progressive, with a bill in the senate to create a central bank. Senator Nye's action has caused many humorous expressions. Here we have a senator who has fostered, even boasted about, progressive ideas and has called himself a liberal. It is necessary only to recall that the father of the central bank idea was the ultra-conservative Alexander Hamilton, the first secretary of the treasury.

Proposes Central Bank

Senator Nye advances a bill with the thought that the central bank would avoid hamstringing of credit. I think financial experts all agree that this is true. The thing which Senator Nye overlooked, however, is that Mr. Hamilton's central bank collapsed and brought ruin and grief to thousands. The reason it collapsed was because in removing control of the banking facilities from experienced bankers, the whole thing had been turned over to the control of politicians who, generally speaking, are experienced only in politics. It seems paradoxical that the North Dakota senator should advance as a liberal scheme the creation of a central bank which one hundred and fifty years ago represented the height of conservatism.

The Nye legislation was offered in the same week that Governor Eccles had proposed in his testimony on the banking bill in the house that the Federal Reserve board should have complete control of the credit expansion and contraction in this country. I believe most persons will have difficulty in considering the two schemes as seperate and distinct.

It is to be noted that there are at least ninety-nine radical members of the house of representatives who are convinced that the federal reserve system has failed of its purposes. Most of them have been repeating without rhyme or reason the accusation that bankers are "refusing" to make loans. They think, therefore, that if there is a central bank or if credit control is placed in the reserve board and taken away from the federal reserve banks where it now reposes there will be additional loans forced out of the commercial banks. History indicates, however, that this is fallacious. No business is going to borrow money when it doesn't need it and neither is any person in his right mind going to make a loan unless he has at least reasonable assurances of repayment.

It will be recalled that President Roosevelt at one time spoke disparagingly of the "refusal" of the bankers to make loans. The President subsequently learned that attempts to pump money out of banks must fail for lack of borrowers. I think everyone acquainted with conditions must agree that the Eccles idea and the Nye legislation mean absolutely nothing in the way of recovery aids, for it has always been true, you can lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink.

The fallacies being put forward by Senator Long and Father Coughlin, and now being nibbled at by Governor Eccles and Senator Nye obviously have been accepted by thousands of people. Senator Long claims that at least six million persons are supporting his scheme. It would seem to be the time, therefore, for citizens to begin to analyze the trend of events, if they are influenced by such leadership.

Stop and Consider

In connection with this trend, it is interesting to observe how much trouble Senator Long and Father Coughlin already have caused for the administration. It must be said frankly, Mr. Roosevelt and his advisers thus far have not found a way to deal with it. They have tried fighting back and each time they have succeeded only in furnishing fresh ammunition for the Long-Coughlin team. Senator Robinson of Arkansas, Democratic leader in the senate, made one of his greatest speeches of criticism of Senator Long's schemes, but the result was only a fresh outburst by the Louisiana senator who took Senator Robinson's own words and converted them to his use.

I reported to you previously that the administration had prepared at one time to take action against Senator Long on income tax questions. But apparently the powers that be have decided that such a course, instead of putting Long back in his place, would make a martyr of him. Among the observers here the belief prevails that the only way Long's attacks can be stopped and his tactics broken up is by ridicule. No politician, however thick-skinned, can stand being made the butt of jokes.

The administration has told congress that it wants to keep the NRA. Through Donald R. Richberg, sometimes called the assistant president, the administration's position was laid before the senate committee on finance the other day with the suggestion that the proposed new NRA should be confined to matters of interstate commerce. That is, the administration proposes that in extending the NRA for two years from the coming June 16 expiration date, it would apply only to industry engaged in lines of commerce and endeavor that carries across state lines. By the same token, the proposal would eliminate the codes of fair practices from application to the so-called service industry and could not, therefore, apply even to hours and wages in those local plants now under codes.

New Plans for NRA

Mr. Richberg's statement immediately provoked discussion which certainly can be expected to increase in volume because it is in the nature of protests from those who claim to speak for labor. Sidney Hillman, of the NRA high command, immediately protested as did William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. Each of these individuals contended that the NRA would be a worse failure than it is now if it were confined to the narrow definition of interstate commerce and applied only to those industries. Mr. Hillman, who is labor's representative on the National Industrial Recovery board, when he learned of Mr. Richberg's statement promptly struck back with an emphatic observation that the country would not permit such action.

"It is unthinkable," he said, "that congress will withdraw the only protection that the three million or four million underpaid, overworked and helpless workers in the service trades now have. Some of them as a result of the NRA are for the first time in their lives getting one day of rest a week and something a little better than the coolie wages they have been paid in the past.

"I am not interpreting the Constitution. I leave that to the Supreme Court of the United States. But I have been impressed by opinions given by outstanding members of the bar that a condition of keeping millions of workers at starvation wage levels does affect interstate commerce."

Thus is presented the conflict of views between administration appointees, and reconciliation of their views is not made easier by the activity of the labor leaders. It is to be recalled that Mr. Green and some of his stalwart labor associates are not enthusiastic about Mr. Roosevelt and his labor policies any longer. They are not going to be satisfied as easily as they were 18 months ago when they accepted various and sundry promises believing that those promises were to solve labor's economic problems. The administration, therefore, is confronted with genuine danger through the complexity of this political situation.

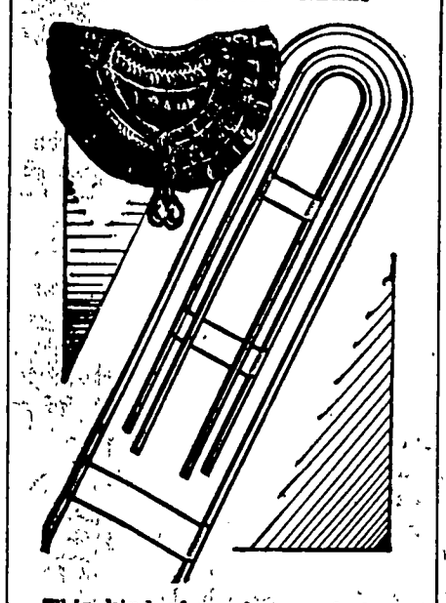
PRETTY WORK IN MALTESE CROCHET

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



This kind of crochet work is not new but has been used by past generations when general crochet work is in vogue. The article to be made is worked up faster than when crocheting with a hook only, and the result is different. A hairpin staple and crochet hook are used, and the hairpin varies in width, depending upon the article to be made or the size of loops that are desired. Cotton, wool, silk or linen thread can be used, and scarfs, centers, edgings, insertions, novelties, in fact any article that is crocheted can be made in maltese crochet. The collar shown above is made of white Shetland wool. The hairpins measure: Small 9x1⅞ inches, medium 9x1⅞ inches, large 12½x2¾ inches. Instructions in hairpin crochet work and for making this collar will be mailed to you upon receipt of 10c. The hairpins are 15c for each size, or 3 sizes for 35c.

Control of Imagination Important to Mankind

Imagination is one of the greatest blessings with which mankind is endowed. Imagination uncontrolled or improperly used may be a curse. Without imagination our lives would be dull and our progress practically nil.

Our definition of imagination is the ability to picture in our minds, things or ideas that are not evidenced by our senses. Practically every invention or improvement made by man was conceived in someone's imagination and made real by creating that which the imagination pictured. We are indebted to the imagination for the best of our music, painting, poetry and the finer things in life.

The artist and the creative mechanic are dependent upon their imagination for all new ideas.

On the other hand most of our troubles and our ills are purely imaginary. They exist only in our imaginations. I have spent a large part of my life imagining calamities that never happened. In so far as this aided in avoiding danger it was beneficial. When the things feared were purely imaginary it was harmful.

Without a proper imagination we can accomplish little. With an uncontrolled imagination we can suffer enormously and unnecessarily.

It behooves us, therefore, to train and control our imagination, for it can become our most valued servant, otherwise we may become its slave. —Frank A. Garbutt, in Los Angeles Times.

"GOOD READING" MATTER FOR THE CHILD TO DECIDE

Supported by The Parents' Magazine, which prints the charge that may influence adult thought in regard to juvenile reading, Josette Frank accuses the nation's fathers and mothers of impoverishing their children's literary diet—letting them starve in the midst of plenty.

"Mother does not always know best, and no book is a good book for a child if it fails to interest him," emphatically declares Miss Frank, her conviction born of experience in the Child Study association.

"There is ample reason for doubting parental infallibility on this point when we realize how often parents have changed their minds as to what is and what is not good reading for children," says this authority, recalling that it is not so long ago parents regarded storybooks with suspicion; then grudgingly approved painfully pure tales and only lately countenanced literature which addresses children as reasoning people. "There are no best books for children, only best books for the particular child. What is real meat to the girl of twelve may be 'applesauce' to the boy of the same age. Nor is there a law of heredity that makes children like what their parents liked before them. Our Jane may find 'Little Women' boring or 'Gulliver's Travels' dull."

Like the horse in the old adage, evidently one may lead a child to a good book but cannot make him read it. This being the truth, however much it may hurt, Miss Frank sanely concludes that about all parents can do is to make available to their children the best there is in the world to read and let nature take its course.

Avoirdupois in Demand

Current prices for wives in Cyprus, Mediterranean isle owned by Britain, range from $100 for a slim wench, to $500 for a buxom girl with plenty of curves. The buying and selling of girls for marriage is, of course, legal. The girls are the daughters of Turkish parents, who sell them to the highest bidders, usually Arabs from Palestine. A document has to be drawn up and stamped, and duty is paid. In the case of divorce, full recompense must be given; but in virtually every case the girls are contented.—Grit.

Doctors Know!

... and they use liquid laxatives

You'd use a liquid, too, if you knew how much better it makes you feel.

A liquid laxative can always be taken in the right amount. You can gradually reduce the dose. Reduced dosage is the secret of real and safe relief from constipation.

Just ask your own doctor about this. Ask your druggist how popular liquid laxatives have become. The right liquid laxative gives the right kind of help—and the right amount of help. When the dose is repeated, instead of more each time, you take less. Until the bowels are moving regularly and thoroughly without aid.

People who have experienced this comfort, never return to any form of help that can't be regulated! The liquid laxative generally used is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It contains senna and cascara, and these are natural laxatives that form no habit. It relieves a condition of biliousness or sluggishness without upset.

To relieve your occasional upsets safely and comfortably, try Syrup Pepsin. The druggist has it.

We do not like to build cheap brooder houses, that is, one with single wall and floor construction, one that during its usefulness will have cost you twice as much in fuel as it should. These brooders might be some inducement to buy if you take first cost into consideration, but you must figure fuel and los of chickens not for only one year, but for the life of the brooder. Fishing Is Foundation Of A Large Industry

More than ten million persons go fishing every year in this country. Fishing is a sport that is enjoyed by a vast army of people. The indulgence in this pleasure creates a market for every conceivable device in tackle and keeps thousands of persons employed. The United States Department of Commerce finds that anglers are paying more for fishing tackle every year than the United States paid for Alaska with its vast fishing resources. Even when you go fishing you are adding your mite to the country's welfare.

The present session of the legislature has revised the fishing and hunting license laws and the new law now fixes the cost of fishing licenses at $1.00, hunting licenses $1.00, and combination fishing and hunting licenses at $1:50.

Seventy-seven spellers competed. C. H. Tompkins, principal of the Garner grade school pronounced the words. Judges were Supt. Lloyd Kraft and Miss Bailey of Hayfield and Mrs. R. J. Fritsch of Garner.

Doris Johnson, entrant from the Klemme schools, won tenth place in the contest.

OLD LIVERY BARN WILL BE TORN DOWN

The old livery barn, which has been a land mark here for many years, and which at one time was one of the town's leading business places before the time of automobiles, will soon be torn down.

W. L. Haberkamp, farmer northwest of Klemme, purchased the old livery barn from Mrs. Bredbenner. He will tear it down and use it for building purposes on his farm.

OLD IDLE HOUR NO MORE

The last boards are being removed this week from what was once the Idle Hour Theatre. H. L. Suckow who came in possession of the building several months ago, had it torn down and has been selling the lumber.

In the days of the "silent movie" the theatre did a flourishing business, but modern times have stamped out the old theatre business and it went out with the others.

Sportsmen Paradise Is Now But A Dream

IOWA GAME IN 1835

The March issue of the Palimpsest, published by the State Historcal Society says, "Wild game was abundant in 1835. Herds of buffalo roamed the prairies bordering the headwaters of the Des Moines, the Skunk, the Iowa, the Cedar and their tributaries Deer and elk stalked the prairies and bear shuffled through the woodlands Smaller game—fox, beaver, muskrat, otter, badger, wolf, mink—were to be found everywhere. Prairie chickens and turkey strutted in the thickets while geese and ducks flew in myriads of long windrows across the sky. Pigeons and pelicans, sand cranes and grouse, songbirds of every hue and description, all lent color and gaiety to the Iowaland of a century ago."

A paragraph on fish says, "The streams abounded with fish—pickerel, sel catfish, pike, trout, and many other varieties. Reptiles glided quietly through the grass; the warning of the deadly rattlesnake was often heard."

What fine picture of fish and game conditions one hundred years ago.

RESEED THIN GRASS PASTURE WITH CLOVER MIXTURE

The most practical method of improving blue grass pasture where the grass is thin and lacking in vigor is to reseed with a mixture of clovers, says County Agent Oberhauser.

The kind of clover to use will depend upon the soil. For soils sweet in spot but largely acid about 4 pounds of sweet clover and 5 of red clover are suggested. On sweet soil more sweet clover can be used to advantage and if the soil is inclined to be acid the red clover should be increased, with perhaps alsike clover added. Liming in advance of seeding the clover and use of some superphosphate or top dressing with manure will hasten the improvment and increase the returns.

It is important that the reseeding be done before the grass has started in the spring if satisfactory results are to be obtained. This will usually mean before the first of April, even before he ground is entirely thawed.

It is also important that pasturing be delayed and the grass allowed to make a fair growth until mid summer at least. in this way assuring the clovers an opportunity of establishing themselves. If pasturing is to begin early and the grass kept grazed short it is not worthwhile to reseed.

CHURCH LOYALTY CRUSADE MARCHES ON

The first half of the special 8 weks United Church Loyalty Crusade in Iowa is past. These four weeks have seen things accomplished which have been a revelation to all connected with the crusade. Increased attendance at church services, Sunday school, young peoples societies, prayer meetings and all other church organiaztions. Pastors all about us are reporting a new spirit of Christian enthusiasm. Many churches are being packed to their capacity every Sunday.

While the local Methodist church is not in the lead, yet a new spirit of church loyalty, of Christ loyalty, is strongly manifest. Last Sunday was family day and there was a fine turnout for the morning service. There were 76 present at the Epworth League service in the evening. We have set our goal for the third time now and it is an even 100. Can it be reached?

Thus far the Crusade has been mostly within the church. We now turn to others. Next Sunday is "Guest Day." We give a special invitation to those not members of the church to come next Sunday as our guests. Let every member of the church bring someone with them next Sunday morning. How many will bring a guest or a neighbor? Of course we want all you to come who have been coming whether you are a member or not.

COUNTY SUPERVISORS "LOOK AT CULVERTS"

G. E. Klipping, F. J. Schoun and Penn Eckels, members of the board of supervisors of Hancock County, took a pleasure trip to Middleton, Ohio, last week. They left Tuesday and returned Friday. While away they looked at some culverts.—Garner Herald. -- --

Now, we ask you, ain't that something. Sounds fishy, on a pleasure trip to "look at some culverts." But, maybe the culverts in Ohio are much fancier than those in Iowa. We have some beautiful culverts around Klemme that can stand looking at by the county dads. If Frank, George and Penn had stated they went on a fishing trip it would sound o. k. Come across, fellows, just what did you see? Don't try to keep anything away from "us tax-payers."

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"YORKTOWN was a great event, Saratoga was a great event, and there have been great events in our history since the War of the Revolution; but the greatest was that which occurred on April 9, 1865, at the little village of Appomattox, when General Lee met General Grant and the question of the indissoluble union of these States passed into history, never to be revived."

Those were the words of a man who was not only an eye-witness to but an active participant in that "greatest event." He was Col. Charles Marshall, aide-de-camp, military secretary and assistant-general on the staff of the Confederate commander from 1862 to 1865 and the quotation is from his collected papers which were edited by a distinguished British soldier, Maj. Gen. Sir Frederick Maurice, and published by Little, Brown and company under the title of "An Aide-de-Camp of Lee." The quotation continues:

"Perhaps the most impressive feature of that occasion was the fact that there American soldiers met together, who dealt with each other as American soldiers. If the officers of General Grant's army had been instructed how to act; if they had learned their parts; if they had been taught by the greatest actors how to play them, how to act at a time when one of the loftiest souls that God ever sent upon earth was humbled, how to act so as to show their respect and veneration, they could not have done better than they did. They could not have done better, because they were and behaved as American soldiers; they loved their enemies and they did good to those who hated them."

Such is the tribute of one who wore the Gray to those who wore the Blue on that historic April day 70 years ago and it is a striking bit of evidence of the essential spirit which will be forever associated with the name of Appomattox. Although three years were yet to elapse before one of the principal actors in its drama should use the exact phrasing of "Let us have peace!" yet that thought runs like a golden thread through the dark fabric of the days of useless bloodshed and blighted hopes immediately preceding the climax, through the letters which passed between Lee and Grant as the inevitable end drew near.

Since the story of Appomattox properly begins with that correspondence, it is appropriate to take into account those foreshadowing events in telling the story of Appomattox. By the end of March, 1865, it was apparent that the Confederacy was a "Lost Cause" indeed. Slowly but surely the sledge-hammer blows of Grant's overwhelming forces had beaten down the resistance of Lee's fast-dwindling ranks of ragged men in gray. The opening week of April found both Grant and Lee weary of war—Grant tortured with headaches and heart-sick over the slaughter he had been forced to bring about; Lee, all hope of victory gone, weighed down with the responsibility that was his for finding some way to save his starving army.

Richmond had been lost. The Confederate government was in flight. Lee's only hope was to escape from the trap that Grant and Sheridan and Meade were closing around him and try to join forces with Gen. Joseph Johnston. On April 6 Ewell's corps was surrounded at Sailor's Creek and surrendered, and after this disaster Lee's Army of Northern Virginia was reduced to two corps under the command of Generals Longstreet and Gordon. They retreated through Farmville closely pursued by Grant's men in blue.

On April 7 Grant sent Lee his first letter, asking the surrender of his army.

Still confident of the fighting ability of his men and believing it possible to save the remnant of his army, Lee wanted to continue the struggle. But his officers prevailed upon him to open negotiations. The result was a letter to Grant asking the terms he would offer on condition of the surrender of Lee's army.

To this Grant replied:

General,—Your note of last evening, in reply to mine of same date, asking the condition on which I will accept the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, is just received. In reply, I would say, that peace being my great desire, there is but one condition I would insist upon; namely, that the men and officers surrendered shall be disqualified for taking up arms against the government of the United States, until properly exchanged. I will meet you, or will designate officers to meet any officers you may name for the same purpose, at any point agreeable to you, for the purpose of arranging definitely the terms upon which the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia will be received.

The next letter from Lee read as follows:

General,—I received at a late hour your note of today. In mine yesterday I did not intend to propose the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, but to ask the terms of your proposition. To be frank, I do not think the emergency has arisen to call for the surrender of this army; but, as the restoration of peace should be the sole object of all, I desire to know whether your proposals would lead to that end. I can not therefore meet you with a view to surrender the Army of Northern Virginia; but, as far as your proposal may affect the Confederate States forces under my command, and tend to the restoration of peace, I should be pleased to meet you at ten a. m., tomorrow, on the old stage road to Richmond, between the picket lines of the two armies.

In the meantime Lee was pushing on toward Appomattox Court House where Gordon, attempting to open the way for retreat, had broken through the cavalry forces barring his road only to find himself confronted by a force of infantry so far superior to his wearied and starving command that an attack would have been suicide. So he sent word to Lee that it was impossible to advance farther and upon receiving this news the commander-in-chief, accompanied by Colonel Marshall, his aide-de-camp, started down the Lynchburg road the next morning, confident that Grant would meet him even though he had not yet received a reply from the Union commander.

Halted by a skirmish of Union troops, Marshall went forward under a white flag and was met by Lieutenant Colonel Whittier, who gave him Grant's reply to Lee's letter of the previous day. It read:

General,—Your note of yesterday received. I have no authority to treat on the subject of peace. The meeting for ten a. m. today would lead to no good. I will state, however, General, that I am equally anxious for peace with yourself; and the whole North entertains the same feeling. The terms upon which peace can be had are well understood. By the South laying down their arms, they will hasten that most desirable event, save thousands of human lives, and hundreds of millions of property not yet destroyed. Seriously hoping that all our difficulties may be settled without the loss of another life, I subscribe myself, etc.,

Lee then directed Marshall to write to the Union commander, asking for an interview, and to deliver it to Whittier, which was done. Sitting on his horse and hastily tearing a leaf from his notebook, Grant dashed off a note telling the Southern commander that he would "push forward to the front for the purpose of meeting you."

When Colonel Babcock of Grant's staff arrived to deliver this note, Lee, fatigued from being in the saddle all night long, was lying on some blankets that had been spread by members of his staff for him under an apple tree at the foot of a hill, on the other side of which stood Appomattox Court House.

Then occurred the incident which thrust fame upon an obscure citizen of Virginia named Wilmer McLean and made his house one of the most famous in American history. It is an incident which also illustrates the strange workings of Fate, as shown by this passage from Marshall's book: "We started off—General Lee, Colonel Babcock, Colonel Babcock's orderly, one of our orderlies and myself. We struck up the hill towards Appomattox. There was a man named McLean who used to live on the first battle field of Manassas (Bull Run), at a house about a mile from Manassas Junction. He didn't like the war, and having seen the first battle of Manassas, he thought he would get away where there wouldn't be any more fighting, so he moved down to Appomattox Court House. General Lee told me to go forward and find a house where he could meet General Grant, and of all people, whom should I meet but McLean. I rode up to him and said, 'Can you show me a house where General Lee and General Grant can meet together?' He took me into a house that was all dilapidated and that had no furniture in it. I told him it wouldn't do. Then he said, 'Maybe my house will do!' He lived in a very comfortable house, and I told him I thought that would suit. I had taken the orderly along with me, and I sent him back to bring General Lee and Babcock, who were coming on behind. I went into the house and sat down, and after a while General Lee and Babcock came in."

So Wilmer McLean, the man who "didn't like the war," was an unexpected witness to two of its high spots, virtually its beginning and its ending. To this Virginian was given the unsought privilege of seeing the cause of the Confederacy gain its first height in the victory at Bull Run and recede to its lowest ebb at Appomattox, from which no tide ever rose again.

Half an hour later the men in McLean's parlor heard footsteps at the front door and in walked Grant. With him came his alter ego, bearded Gen. John A. Rawlins; his aide-de-camp, dusky Col. A. C. Barker, the Iroquois Indian; "Fighting Phil" Sheridan, the stocky little Irish cavalry leader; and Generals Horace Porter and E. R. C. Ord.

After a brief talk over the terms of the surrender Colonel Parker, Grant's aide-de-camp, brought a little table from the corner of the room and on it the Union commander wrote out the terms of surrender. The Confederate officers were to give their individual paroles not to take up arms against the United States and to sign a like parole for their commands. All arms, artillery and public property were to be handed over to the Union forces, but the officers were to retain their side-arms, horses and personal baggage. The soldiers also were allowed to keep their horses, because, as Grant said, they would "need them for their spring plowing."

After Grant had written this note, he handed it to Lee, who read it over, then directed his aide, Colonel Marshall, to draft a reply in which he accepted the terms of surrender.

In the meantime, Parker had made a copy of Grant's letter. Says Marshall:

"Then General Grant signed his letter, and I turned my letter over to General Lee and he signed it. Parker handed me General Grant's letter, and I handed him General Lee's reply, and the surrender was accomplished. There was no theatrical display about it. It was in itself perhaps the greatest tragedy that ever occurred in the history of the world, but it was the simplest, plainest, and most thoroughly devoid of any attempt at effect, that you can imagine."

Thus the Civil war came to an end and Appomattox became an historic name.

Gen. Dawes Sees Joy

It is pleasant to read a Washington dispatch saying that the government will establish a great airport in Hawaii near Fort Kamehameha, named for the last king of Hawaii.

Arthur Brisbane

The idea is to keep enough bombing planes there to take care of unwelcome flyers or surface ships arriving from Asia.

It will be more pleasant to read, as you may do later, that the government plans to establish a powerful air base on the island of Guam, which we are free to fortify, now that the Washington conference agreements have been repudiated and our silly pledge not to fortify Guam is wiped out.

Thanks to airplanes, the Greek rebellion is crushed. The old Greek patriot, Venizelos, leading the revolt at the age of seventy-two, fled from his home on the Island of Crete across the Aegean sea to an Italian island for refuge.

Weeping, the old man vowed that he would never again set foot on Greek soil. A rebel cruiser took Venizelos to the protection of the Italian flag. Then, last of the fleet that had rebelled, the cruiser Averoff surrendered to the government.

Max Schmeling, German heavyweight prize fighter, beat Mr. Hamas with ease and says, "Now we get Baer." Baer, you know, is the world's heavyweight champion. The fact that he is a Jew, and not a blue-eyed Nordic, with the back of his head as straight up and down as a board fence, is said to annoy Mr. Hitler.

It will interest Hitler and others. A hard-hitting "Nordic" meets Max Baer, a tall young Jew, who laughs while he fights. The meeting will settle nothing. Racial supremacy does not depend on the fist. But in New York city it ought to draw a crowd, gigantic, and a "gate" of about one million dollars.

General Dawes, once Vice President, always busy, now visiting General Pershing at Tucson, Ariz., says: "America is on the verge of real economic recovery. Its natural force, and human nature, are definitely working for recovery, and in May of this year, positively not later than July, the nation will know the depression is over." Well, it is a pleasure to have somebody at least say so, even though they may have to say it over and over, year after year.

The California assembly votes 58 to 17 in favor of the Townsend plan. The state senate, however, revolted and defeated the resolution calling on congress to enact the old age pension bill. It is not possible for the United States to pay twenty-four thousand million dollars every year, the total cost of giving $200 per month to every man past sixty.

It does not cost the assemblyman anything to vote for the impossible, and it makes him feel politically safe.

H. G. Wells is in America to write about the New Deal. He will find some good applicable descriptive copy in his book, written long ago, "Doctor Moreau's Island."

Doctor Moreau performs some strange and horribly cruel operations in the effort to make animals speak and otherwise act like human beings.

Mr. Wells will find the new era performing strange operations on business men, to make them speak the new business language.

New Yorkers are told that all workers pay in taxes in various ways the earnings of one day every week. The man who has $5,000 a year pays $1,000 toward the support of government. Some men with bigger incomes, busy just now borrowing money with which to pay taxes, could tell a more interesting story.

When watches were first made a Frenchman said it was strange that man, with genius and intelligence enough to make a watch, should be superstitious enough to believe in ghosts. It's more strange that the human race with sufficient intellect and will to fly, travel underneath the ocean, and talk around the world, without wires, should be feeble and foolish enough to believe in a permanent depression. The belief in ghosts is slowly disappearing. Let's hope and believe the depression will disappear more rapidly.

The national ladies' hairdressers' convention, gathered in Toronto, is informed that platinum blonds are on the wane and red-haired women, politely called "titian," are rising in favor. The platinum blond is a modern invention, a passing thing, whereas the woman with red hair antedates all the governments and civilization that we know, and may outlast them.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted

by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Air pilots use an expression that I want to appropriate in connection with a discussion of the country's economic situation and its relation to the administration policies and plans. The pilots refer to "low visibility" and "low ceiling" when they want to say that they cannot see far in the distance. It seems to me that the clarity, or lack of it, with respect to current economic conditions warrants the use of the term "low visibility"—if any credence whatsoever is to be placed in the statements and activities of business leaders.

"Low Visibility"

Government agencies by the dozen have been issuing rapid fire reports in recent weeks showing how industrial production is improved, how the price level has shown signs pleasing to industry, if not to the consumers, and how the volume of bank clearings is progressing upward. Bank deposits were seven billion dollars higher at the end of 1934 than at the end of 1933. The Reconstruction Finance corporation is having difficulty in keeping its borrowers from paying back the loans and the Securities and Exchange commission recently was made very happy by application of a great packing company to list forty-five million dollars in new securities.

The treasury has been pursuing what is regarded as orthodox financial policies and a good many other agencies appear to be veering away from the leftists' course that so long dominated Roosevelt policies. All of these, it seems, ought to be reassuring to business, whether that business be the great corporations or the little tradesmen in the corner groceries. But there has been a fly in the ointment and that seems to be the reason why masses of capital and a goodly percentage of the country's population shares uncertainty about the future economic condition.

I have sought answers to this puzzle in many quarters and I have had many different explanations. It is made to appear, however, from the weight of opinion that I have gathered that the relief rolls are the cause of this lack of faith. It has been recorded previously that approximately twenty-two million persons, about one-sixth of our population, are living on relief. This staggering total, the highest ever known, obviously represents a basic weakness somewhere and the administration is seeking to locate that weakness. This total has been reached by a steady growth. It has not come suddenly. The circumstance, therefore, has led many individuals to the conviction that Mr. Roosevelt's reform measures are failures.

Perhaps it is a lack of understanding on the part of business that prompts it to keep its pen in its pocket and its check-book closed under these conditions. It may be that business leaders have failed to read the possibilities represented by increased production and the other signs of an improved economy. Nevertheless, business apparently has found it difficult to see far or clearly into the future. It seems to look upon the economic condition as having a "low ceiling" and "low visibility."

Washington correspondents were startled in the President's press conference the other day when he let it be known that he plans four additional messages to congress this session, not including his recent bitter denunciation of the holding companies when he asked that action be had on that bill. It was not the number of messages that surprised the correspondents; it was the fact that the President said with some frankness that he did not know what subjects would be treated in them. To most of the observers it seemed wholly reasonable that the President should be unwilling to outline those messages, but it was incomprehensible that he should admit his inability to say what subjects would be handled.

More Messages

After that information came out of the White House there was a noticeable sinking in the optimism of a great many men who count for something in the country's business structure. Most of them said frankly that they did not know which way to turn. Among their numbers were more who believed sincerely that the President was giving up some of his numerous New Deal experiments and was proceeding on ground which the conservative thought considers to be solid. The reaction to work of this kind always has been and always will be bad from the standpoint of the political party in power.

Added to the circumstances I have just mentioned, one should remember how congress normally is unpopular with the business community. In many years past I have heard the plaint of business representatives in Washington asking or urging for adjournment. Business men normally feel that the less work congress gets done and the sooner it leaves the halls of the Capitol, the better conditions will be. The same is true now, only more so.

It may as well be admitted that the current session of congress is here for a considerable number of weeks. This is true for several reasons. In the first instance, many of the members feel that they want to be legislators and not rubber stamps any longer. There is no longer the overwhelming fear among congressmen of the President's power. They have shown this several times lately, including the forty-nine day battle over the public works bill.

Feeling their independence again, members of the house and senate have begun to press for action on legislation carrying out their own ideas. Much of this runs counter to administration ideas on legislation. Further clashes are inevitable. When there are confliction of plans in congress you can expect to see a long-drawn-out session, and since this is not an election year, there is no need for the members to rush home to mend their political fences.

It is not strange, therefore, that business as a whole is worried about congress. The business leaders themselves insist that it is not strange that they are worried about the secrecy which surrounds the President's plans. The two circumstances, taken together, obviously serve as a brake on the wheels of industry because now as always in the past business will not risk the last vestige of its capital resources unless it can be assured of stability.

While the Democrats, the party in power, are floundering, the Republicans lie wholly dormant. Seldom in my experience in Washington has the opposition party been as useless as the Republicans now seem to be. They are making no effort at all to gather funds for use by Chairman Henry P. Fletcher of the Republican national committee in taking advantage of vulnerable spots in the Democratic armor. In fact, they have left Mr. Fletcher rather high and dry and when he attempts to do anything one faction or another shoots harder at him than at its natural rivals, the Democrats.

Useless Opposition

I have heard expressions lately to the effect that Mr. Fletcher has a golden opportunity at hand. He is in the enviable position of being able every time he is criticized by his own partisans to point out that the help they are giving him is worse than nil and that criticism under such a circumstance does not become them. The thought is that Mr. Fletcher by taking the bull by the horns, becoming militant and mapping out a program with which his wide knowledge of politics equips him, could become actually the dominant Republican force in this country. Thus far Mr. Fletcher has sat back in his easy chair and has taken all the darts. Some observers are asking how long that can continue and the Republican party remain alive.

Early in the Roosevelt administration the Republican policy was to avoid criticism of the Democratic leadership at all times. They declared, and openly announced their views, that if they criticized Mr. Roosevelt and his New Deal they would be characterized as obstructionists. If the New Deal failed the Democrats surely would place the blame on the Republican opposition. But political writers here tell me that Mr. Roosevelt's political honeymoon has been over quite a while and that there is, in their opinion, no need for the Republicans longer to stick their heads in the sand after the manner of the ostrich, and see nothing.

As the administration gets its hands on fresh supplies of money, a strong demand has set up for more concrete highways. There seems to be almost a propaganda in favor of constructing concrete highways here, there and everywhere, including two or three or four transcontinental, high speed roadways.

Concrete Highways

The new public works bill carries a considerable sum for highway construction and it is quite natural that dealers in road materials and equipment want to get hold of it. My inquiries among road-building authorities lead me to believe, however, that the use of these funds ought to be examined closely and any program that is mapped out should be the result of careful study. Around the Department of Agriculture there is a chronic complaint that too many through highways and not enough farm-to-market roads have been constructed. If that be correct, the authorities tell me, then the concrete road-building program will have to be revamped or else there will be hundreds of miles of concrete roadway constructed at an expense so great that it can be called reckless waste.

Some years ago the bureau of public roads made a statistical study which indicated that a concrete roadway, as distinguished from other hard-surface highways, was unjustified unless the daily volume of automobile traffic approximated fifteen hundred cars. It is to be remembered that a concrete roadway costs several times as much as when other materials are used in hard-surface construction. So the public roads statistician figured out the life of a roadway built of less expensive materials would be of sufficient length to warrant use of the cheaper material where the volume of travel was low.

THE "NORMAL CHILD"

The conception of the "inner nature" of the child in progressive education is actually so idealistic that it is entirely unfair to most normal boys and girls. For it assumes quite blandly that the average child is by his very nature intelligent, talented, self-reliant, reasonable and sociably inclined. That he has within himself the ability to make logical judgments and form sensible opinions. But the sad and sober truth is that the average healthy child has very few of these essentially adult traits of mind and character.

The average child is selfish, he is stubborn, he is forgetful, he is cruel, he is illogical. His sense of humor is of an extremely low variety. And his inherent taste, judged by civilized adult standards, is rather atrocious.

The child is like this not because he has been poorly trained or badly conditioned or harshly repressed, but simply because he is a normal child. —Dr. Grace Adams in Scribner's Magazine.

Convincing Argument

Horses, buggies and wagons were drawn into service in reaching a church celebration at Holt, Mo., because the country roads were so muddy motor cars could not travel them." Daniel Boone's Hair Was Pulled Out by Indians

In 1769 what is now Kentucky was an unexplored wilderness, and Daniel Boone was hired by a syndicate of Virginians and Carolinians to lay the course of empire westward into a land which he described as being thick with buffaloes. He thus became the pathfinder in the mighty trek to the West, observes a writer in the Kansas City Star. And the Cherokees were "persuaded" by long rifles to sell all of Kentucky and most of Tennessee to the frontiersman's employers, for 14,000 British pounds—in money and trade goods. Boone, at the head of some thirty stalwart axmen, cut the Great Wilderness road through from Kentucky to the East, where, in his tracks, the wheels of the empire builders were to leave their ruts. And the first important settlement became, in Boone's day, Boonesborough, on the site of Transylvania fort, built by Boone.

Daniel Boone was considered by his contemporaries "an instrument ordained by God to settle the wilderness." But most of his settling was done with a rifle; he was, in fact, for most of the settlements, a one-man defense against the Indians, and, it appears, an effective one. During the Revolution, Indian forays against the settlers, frequently led by British officers, were repulsed time and again by Boone and his pioneers. In 1778 a party led by Boone on a salt-hunting expedition was captured by Indians and taken to Detroit. All save the leader were exchanged or ransomed. A Shawnee chief took a fancy to Boone and adopted him. The ceremony of adoption consisted in pulling out all of his hair except a thick scalplock.

Pillar Box Sign Gained Fame for the Inventor

There are many ways of becoming famous, writes the Paris correspondent of the London Sunday Observer. That earl of Sandwich who first ate meat between two pieces of bread put his name into every mouth, and the Parisian printer, of English extraction, who set up upon the pavements those round constructions, three times as wide as a London pillar box and twice as high, and used them for the display of theatrical advertisements which were illuminated at night from the under-edge of a projecting circular roof, not only established what has become one of the most characteristic features of the Paris landscape, but made his name live.

For these pillars were for many years, and sometimes still are, called "collennes Morris." It is more than fifty years since the first of them made its appearance.

First Permanent Settlements

The exact dates and places of the first permanent settlements in the 13 original states are often difficult to determine, as authorities differ. The following are generally accepted: Connecticut, Windsor, 1633, English; Delaware, Wilmington, 1638, Swedes; Georgia, Savannah, 1733, English; Maryland, St. Marys, 1634, English; Massachusetts, Plymouth, 1620, English; New Hampshire, Portsmouth, 1623, English; New Jersey, Elizabethtown, 1617, Dutch; New York, New York, 1613, Dutch; North Carolina, Albemarle Sound, 1653, English; Pennsylvania, Chester, 1638, Swedes; Rhode Island, Providence, 1636, English; South Carolina, Ashley River, 1670, English; Virginia, Jamestown, 1607, English.

Languages of the World

Including all of its various dialects, Chinese is spoken by about 400,000,000 persons and is the most used language. Various languages are spoken in India, Hindustani being used by some 100,000,000. English is the second most commonly used language, spoken by some 180,000,000; then Russian with 140,000,000; German 110,000,000; French, 70,000,000; Portuguese, 60,000,000; Japanese, 53,000,000; Spanish and Italian, each 50,000,000; Polish, 16,000,000. These are the estimates made by Whitaker's Almanac, which gives the number of different languages spoken in the world as about 5,000.

Mathematical Ability

Rare mathematical ability is not always dependent on education. Some prodigies have been illiterate, others have known nothing of the principles of mathematics. Johann Dase (1824-1861), the greatest mental mathematical marvel in history, had no understanding of the fundamentals of mathematics, yet he could multiply two 100-figure numbers in his head in a very short time.—G. P. Elliott, Arlington, California, in Collier's Weekly.

Test Your Love

A good old Scotch custom for determining love affairs consisted of taking two nuts, bestowing on one your own name and on the other the name of your beloved, putting them on the fire, and watching how they burn. Should they burn quietly, side by side, then the issue of your love affair will be prosperous; but if one starts away from the other, the result will be unfavorable.

WHAT HIGH SCHOOL MEANS TO ME!

Different people have many different ideas concerning high school Some people do not even come to high school because they think that there is no good which can come from it.

Some people come to high school just to get out of work at home, to have a good time, or just to spend their time somewhere. To most of these people who do not have much of an interest in it, high school does not mean the real thing.

To me high school means a golden opportunity: to come to school, to study, and work and prepare yourself for later life. Contrary to what some people think, high school is not a place of all work and study, but there is much enjoyment to get out of outside activities.

Therefore you who can come to high school for some of the first reasons above mentioned, would enjoy school much more if you looked at it from the other side.—Milvern Barz.

OUR CLASS AS REPRESENTED IN SCHOOL ACTIVITIES

We, the junior class think we're just "it." We have as our officers, Harold Kothenbeutel, president, and Graydon Back, vice-president, with Lyndon Kilgore, secretary and treasurer. Those who know these people will agree that our officers are well chosen. In athletics we have made a good showing, placing three men on the high school basketball team and two on the second team. We also won the interclass tournament by defeating the seniors and sophomores. In our home declam contest three juniors won first places and, one, Franklin Kluckhohn is still going in the state contest. There are several of us singing in the glee clubs and we are well represented in the orchestra and band. All in all we are a pretty good bunch. We admit it ourselves.—Lyndon Kilgore.

BORROWERS AND LENDERS

"May I borrow a pencil?" "Who has usd my ink?" "What has happened to my Goverment book?" All these questions are heard over and over again in the assembly or in class rooms. When you borrow, are you not supposed to return the borrowed property? That is probably the reason why so many things are lost this year. Many people borrow things without the permission of the owner and for this reason borrowers have become a nuisance.

If we all choose as our motto: "Return borrowed property," we would have more peace and quiet between the borrower and the lenders.—Harriet Gibbs.

AN APOLOGY

We wish to offer apologies to Harold Kothenbeutel for the junior class as a whole. The other morning we were reading aloud the poem "The Sioux Chief's Daughter." Harold, however, had been enjoying one of his snoozes and had been awakened by the person who sat next to him. When he had had the place pointed out to him, he arose and read the following: "And did I dream and do I wake, or did I wake and now but dream?" That, however, was as far as he got, for everyone broke out laughing at him and it took quite some time/ to restore order.

We realize how easily some people go to sleep, especially in some class, so therefore, we apologize, and hope it won't happen again.—Lyndon Kilgore.

DO YOU KNOW?

That the snapping turtle is destructive to waterfowl as well as fish life and should be killed at every opportunity?

That the practice of game management has been common in England for many years.

That the bird feeding program carried on in Iowa during the past winter has been directly responsible for carrying through the winter large numbers of good healthy birds and that thousands of shelters and feeding stations have been built?

SPRING

Spring is my weakness. The air is sweet, clean, fresh and pleasant (when we don't have dust storms) and is perfumed by the flowers with their best perfume. The birds sing their sweetest songs, telling old Mother Nature their happiness and troubles. The flowers with much pride show their beautiful colors, glistening against the sun in a radiant array. When the wind blows, they seem to talk to each other by the rustle of their leaves and nodding of their heads. Spring reminds me of a magic fairyland. Why just thinking about spring, I could almost fly like a bird, gracefully, smoothly, gliding across the tree tops with the thought "Spring."—Franklin Kluckhohn.

THE UNITED BROTHERHOOD OF LOAFERS

In our school, there has recently originated a new organization; namely The United Brotherhood of Loafers. This organization has a very stiff set of rules to abide by.

1. No members shall work more than one half a class period. The other half he must sleep in order to prepare for the next trying hour.

2. No member need be to class on time. They'll wait for him anyway.

3. No member shall prepare his lessons. What good are they after all?

Our United Loafers present the preamble of the constitution:

We, the people of the United Loafers, in order to form a more perfect group, establish justice, insure peace and rest, provide for the common defense of the oganization, and secure the blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish the constitution for the United Brotherhood of Loafers.

In order to join this organization you must possess these qualities: ability to sleep during school hours, ability to pass up lessons, etc., etc. without a pang of conscience; ability to make friends who will lend a helping hand and "pull you through" at the last minute.

The motto adopted by unanimous consent of the charter members is: Never let studying interfere with your education.—Dolorys Cook.

Grades 1 and 2

The first grade have completed the Webster Primer and the Fact and Story Primer during the last few weeks.

The second grade have completed the Winston Second Reader.

We have two new poem charts in our room. Small paper balloons with the name of the poem and the child who has learned it are pasted on the chart.

Miss Thorne is reading "The Dutch Twins" to us. We are making our sand table represent Holland.

In our 100 addition fact test Herbie M., Herbert S. Junior, Edward and Emily had perfect scores. Ruth, LaVonne C. Ronald, Patty, Herbert S. Betty, Edward, Ewald, Emily, Junior and LaVonne H. had 100 in spelling on Friday.

Grades 3 and 4

The third and fourth grades were glad to welcome Marjorie Hartbeck Robert Reed, and Betty Jean Reed into their classes lately.

The children have been studying about Holland this month. They are always eager to learn about their Dutch friends.

Eunice Larsen and Betty Jean Etchen wrote the best Bible stories this week. As prizes Eunice received an April picture and Betty Jean received a booklet containing colored Bible pictures.

The third graders are studying about birds in language now. They are learning about the habits of birds living around here.

SYMPATHY

We extend sympathy to Alida Schubert, Paul and Verner Lau, and Luther Schmidt, whose grandmother Mrs. William Lau, passed away Thursday night.

AN INTRODUCTION

We, the class of '36, would like to introduce ourselves, individually. We admit 'twill only be one more year until we have the spotlight in the newspaper, but even so we think it our duty to have you know us more before that time arrives.

In our entire class we have some very gifted people. It seems that each one of us posseses a different art. The most popular art with oue junior right now seems to be sleeping during class and then when his turn comes to recite he can give the most absent-minded answers Whether this is due to loss of sleep or spring fever, we can not say. We have come to the conclusion that this person's art could be classified as the portrayer of the "Sleeping Beauty." That "Sleeping Beauty" is none other than our class president, Harold Kothenbeutel.

Our next great hero who seems to be the one that the boys depend on in American Government tests—that is in the matter of beating the girls in the tests, is Joe Penner's undersudy—Pete Kilgore.

We have another very gifted person in the matter of imitating. Why he can just imitate anything. Along with this he is a wonderful entertainer especially to two junior girls. H has an immense and outstanding personality which aids his wonderful ability of acting. He especially enjoys his homemade ice cream and cake. That's all right, Franklin, the rest of us do, too.

Our next two people are the Barz brothers—that is the way our superintendent speaks of them most of the time. Perhaps it is because they are more or less seen together, whispering or talking with each other, or maybe it would be more appropriate to say, because they are just the right size to make excellent clowns.

The next, our class vice-president is a very able-bodied person. He specializes in acrobatic stunts. We are all quite sure he acquired this magnificent strength by taking Franklin Kluckhohn's advice, "Be sure and eat your Wheaties." How about it, Graydon?

As far as LaVern Hammitt is concerned, we do not see much of him. His cooking interests take a great deal of his time.

We next have two boys that seem to be the old standbys of the class. They both have helped a great deal in all the basketball games that have been played this year. The two noble ones are Leo Brinkman and Walter Klotzbach.

No, we have not forgotten the girls. Why, how could our class get along without them, especially when it comes to always having our lessons prepared and being on time in English class. How's that for you boys? (We will admit that you certainly win over all in our American Government tests.)

It seems that the most industrious of our group are Harriet and Gladys. Why in Bookkeeping those two are all through with their exercises. The only reason we can think for their progess in this subject is that it just agrees with them; for the rest of us it's too much concentration.

The Jolly Three of our class are Ada, Mabel, and Mary. They always will be seen wearing hearty smiles. This laughter of theirs is often due to our "Radio Fan." Don't blame you girls. Keep it up.

The next is one of the "Unholy Four" (that group of girls who talk and giggle during the noon hour). She is also known as the "Absent Minded Daughter." This is due to her ear being stained while trying to impersonate Shylock. Another reason for the defect is having to listen to too much back seat driving during her life time. You should be able to know her fairly well as she is only "Shorty" (Dolorys Cook)

Last, but most certainly not least is another of the "Unholy Four." A gal with a winning smile, a gay disposition and brown eyes. Mmm! She is also the author of the rest of this column, but was too modest to introduce herself, so may I; ladies and gentlemen, present to you, LaVonne Sherwood, the songbird of the junior class.

CURRENT EVENTS PASS IN REVIEW

HUGE NEW ARMY IS ORDERED BY HITLER IN DEFIANCE OF VERSAILLES PACT.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

GERMANY, having recently boldly announced that she was now possessed of a military air force in violation of the Treaty of Versailles, still more boldly declares she is no longer bound by the obligations of that pact and proposes to build up an army of about 480,000 men, comprising 12 corps of three divisions each. This was the decision of the cabinet, which decreed compulsory military training throughout the reich. The exact number of men in the army will be determined by a law to be enacted later.

Chancellor Hitler

This was Chancellor Hitler's reply to the action of France's chamber of deputies in accepting Premier Flandin's plan to increase the term of conscript service in the French army to 18 months and subsequently to two years. Germany considered that France was "dealing the last blow to disarmament," and Hitler, rushing to Berlin from Berchtesgaden, directed the action of the cabinet and issued to the German nation a rousing appeal for full support. He declared that the failure of other nations to reduce armament as called for in the Versailles treaty had released Germany from all treaty obligations, and that while the reich had only peaceful intentions, it must re-arm to protect its territorial integrity and maintain the respect of the world as a coguarantor of European peace.

The Reichsfuehrer stated that Germany did all she could to stabilize peace as evidenced by three facts: She offered non-aggression pacts to all her neighbors; she regulated her affairs with Poland; she showed France that after the return of the Saar there were no territorial questions at issue between France and Germany.

Official London was greatly disturbed by this sudden action of the German government which came just ten days before the date set for a meeting of Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, and Lord Privy Seal Anthony Eden with Hitler in Berlin. The British were prepared to offer abolition of some of the military clauses of the Versailles treaty in return for Germany's adherence to the inclusive plan for European security. But it was feared Hitler would now demand formal recognition of German rearmament, including an army of half a million men, a military air fleet of 1,500 planes and a navy one-third the strength of the British navy. All of which is far beyond what the British peace plan contemplates.

Of course all the world has been aware for some time of the fact that Germany was re-arming. Before the French chamber voted to approve Flandin's project, Jean Fabry, president of the chamber's army commission, stated that the army of the reich had been strengthened in one year from 100,000 to 600,000, asserting the reichswehr had been increased from 100,000 (the treaty figure) to 400,000 and the nominal total of 100,000 police in barracks doubled.

COMPLETE collapse of the administration's long battle to regulate prices in the steel industry is seen in an NRA offer to give up, and in charges by the federal trade commission of a fiasco of collusion. The trade commission insists that price-fixing be scrapped, and no prosecution of steel companies under the anti-trust laws. The trade commission charges that under the code the steel companies have fixed and raised prices on government contracts, in defiance of competitive bidding requirements. Bids were identical, and then steel executives slapped fines of $10 a ton on members who let the government have steel cheaper.

GOV. MARTIN L. DAVEY of Ohio, charged by Federal Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins with "corruption" in Ohio relief, went before the state senate and demanded a thorough investigation. He defied Hopkins to come to Ohio for trial on a warrant he had secured, charging Hopkins with criminal libel. Hopkins had alleged in a letter that he has proof of "corruption" of relief administration in Ohio including soliciting of funds for campaign purposes from firms that sold relief materials. Hopkins, through C. C. Stillman, FERA regional officer, has taken over administration of Ohio relief. Department of Justice attorneys in Washington declare they stand ready to defend Hopkins, but there was no indication that Hopkins would go to Ohio, although he may change his mind. The spectacular blowup is said to have had its inception in the 1934 political campaign. Davey made campaign speeches charging that Ohio relief was mismanaged, and particularly aimed his barbs at Cleveland. This irked Cleveland leaders since relief there had been administered through a non-political group, which later became the official Cuyahoga county relief administration. Hopkins often took note of the fact that Cleveland's relief committee was "one of the best in the country." Later Davey pledged himself not to touch the Cleveland organization, but is said to have ousted several members, and repeated old charges. Cleveland leaders took the fight to Washington.

RUMBLINGS from Russia declare that Germany is concluding a military pact with Japan. Gen. Sadao Araki, former Japanese minister of war, it is claimed, is going to Berlin soon to discuss terms. Official warning went out over Russia that "war may break out unexpectedly at any moment." Michael Kalinin, president of the all-Russian central executive committee, made this blunt statement in an address before organizers of the Soviet cavalry, and it was later broadcast over the republic. He blamed conditions on "the present political whims of the dominating classes of capitalistic countries." He said:

"It is not necessary to prove that the Soviet Union is against war. No other government in the world ever manifested a desire for peace more than ours."

COMPROMISE and White House pressure brought about the defeat of the McCarran "prevailing wage" amendment to the work relief bill in the senate, and administration leaders were confident that the measure would be laid before the President for signature within a few days. The deadlock over the amendment was broken when Senator Richard B. Russell, Jr., of Georgia proposed a substitute which leaves the President free to pay "security wages," officially estimated at $50 a month, provided they do not adversely affect the wage scale in private industry; and providing that the prevailing wage must be paid on all permanent federal building projects. This way out, which had been approved by the White House, was accepted by the senate by a vote of 83 to 2, after the McCarran amendment had been defeated, 50 to 38. The two votes against the compromise were cast by Metcalfe of Rhode Island and Hale of Maine, both Republicans. Before the vote on the McCarran amendment was taken Senator Glass announced he was authorized to say that if it prevailed President Roosevelt would veto the measure.

There remained many obstacles over which the relief bill must be pushed, for the regular Republicans and a considerable number of Democrats were determined to alter it materially. Several senators favored cutting it down by three or even four billions; and La Follette of Wisconsin wanted the total increased to ten billions. Inflation and bonus enthusiasts also planned to attach riders.

THE house appropriations committee favorably reported out the Department of Agriculture appropriations bill for the 1936 fiscal year. A cut of $513,878,758 was due largely to a $411,022,428 slash in the AAA item. The total bill calls for $653,278,758, of which $570,000,000 would go to the Agriculture Adjustment administration activities. At committee hearings it was explained that it is impossible to estimate how much would have to be obligated because of the crop control program, but the AAA item was a rough estimate of processing tax collections and is not controlling. Henry Wallace, secretary of agriculture, told the committee that the farmers' share of the national income is now about 10.2 per cent, and should be 13 to 10 per cent.

Sec'y Wallace

Wallace said "true prosperity" cannot come "until there has been a very material increase in the output of physical goods, industrial goods."

"If in some way it were possible to turn out 50 per cent more industrial goods at a price definitely lower than the present price," the secretary testified, "the result would be to make it possible for agriculture to buy more with the agricultural dollar and there would be more factory workers to be fed in the cities."

COUNTERFEITERS, narcotics dealers, bootleggers and other violators of federal laws were given a tremendous shock and many hundreds of them were thrown into jail when the government opened up an anti-crime campaign that covered the entire land. The initial raids, made without warning, were immensely successful, and it was announced they would be continued indefinitely. Twelve thousand federal officers took part in the operations, and besides the individuals captured, millions of dollars worth of contraband was seized.

The drive was described by treasury officials as a test of the advantages of concerted action by all enforcement agencies coming under its supervision. Such a campaign was planned as early as last summer when a "crime co-ordination committee" was formed, under the leadership of Harold N. Graves, special assistant to Secretary Morgenthau.

WILEY POST'S second attempt to fly from Los Angeles to New York through the stratosphere in record-breaking time ended at Cleveland, where he was compelled to come down because his supply of oxygen was running short. He said he would have "passed out" in a few minutes if he had not descended to breathable air. Post is convinced that only this trouble prevented his making the transcontinental flight in seven hours and 40 minutes, and he declared he would soon try again. His unofficial average speed to the Cleveland airport was 279.46 miles an hour.

GREECE is mopping up the loose ends of the revolt. Some fighting is reported near the Bulgarian border where one regiment, part of the rebellious Fourth army corps, has declined to surrender, but the revolution is definitely over. Eleutherios Venizelos, ex-premier, and leader of the futile revolt, was reported a refugee at Rhodes, the tiny island where Julius Caesar was interned by pirates some 2,500 years ago. Venizelos was transferred there by the Italian government after he had been landed in Italy by one of the rebel warships. Gen. George Karmenos, rebel commander, is safe in Bulgaria, where officials have refused extradition. Rebel prisoners are being concentrated in camps, and courts martial are functioning in Saloniki, Kasala and Larissa, and military trials have begun in Athens.

THE President's special message calling for abolition of utility holding companies stirred up a storm that probably surprised even such an astute politician as Mr. Roosevelt. The President urged legislation to abolish these holding companies which were unable to show they were operated in the public interest. Representative Bertrand H. Snell, Republican leader, immediately attacked the message, claiming the President had denounced propaganda against the proposed legislation, and was himself propagandizing for it. Utility companies also swung into the battle and thousands of investors in utility stocks are reported to have sent in protests to congress. In the senate, Norris, Nebraska Republican, offered a resolution calling upon the federal trade commission to investigate propaganda regarding the legislation. The senate approved without debate. Charges were made by utility companies that because of the administration's campaign against public utilities "the values of utility securities has declined by three and one-half billion dollars since 1933." Enactment of legislation to halt holding companies, will cause enormous loss to the American family, one power official testified before the house interstate commerce committee.

Senator Norris

THE senate smacked down Senator Huey Long for his filibustering tactics and his efforts to amend the administration's $4,880,000,000 work relief measure. The Kingfish had demanded alterations in the work relief bill which would take $100,000,000 away from the $600,000,000 earmarked for CCC work and allot it to students in colleges and universities. Long's amendment was defeated by a vote of 58 to 27. To prove that old adage of "politics makes strange bedfellows," Long was aided by Senator Hiram Johnson of California, who declared that the senate should have something to say about methods for spending the huge sum sought by the President. Johnson has heretofore been considered a supporter of the President. Long's amendment brought forth other proposed changes which should keep the senators busy arguing for several days. The bonus bill may be dragged in and an attempt made to make it a rider to the relief measure, and inflationists and leaders of other "ists" will insist on having their say.

ALL outstanding first Liberty loan bonds have been called for redemption by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau. The $2,000,000,000 outstanding has been called for June 15, before which time the treasury will likely offer lower interest-bearing securities in exchange for the first Liberties, saving the government some $14,000,000 in annual interest charges.

NEW DEAL policies took two more batterings as Federal courts held both the AAA and NRA unconstitutional as regards intrastate business. The administration might find some consolation in another ruling which held the radical Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage bill was valid. Federal Judge Merrill E. Otis, at Kansas City, declared the Frazier-Lemke law was constitutional, "although unwise in many of its provisions and almost incomprehensible matter." Judge Otis said his ruling was not the first in which the act was upheld, and that an appeal was already before the United States Supreme court and a decision might be expected shortly. The AAA was declared invalid as regards intrastate business by Federal Judge Ira Lloyd Letts at Providence, R. I., who issued an injunction restraining Secretary of Agriculture Wallace from enforcing the act against three Rhode Island retail milk dealers, on the grounds that their business was conducted entirely within the state, and the national government had no right to interfere. At Newark, N. J., Federal Judge Guy L. Fake ruled the national recovery act unconstitutional as applied to intrastate commerce "because it attempts an unlawful delegation of legislative authority." The latter decision agrees with that handed down by Federal Judge Nields in the controversial Wierton steel dispute.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT clashed with veterans over immediate payment of the two billion dollar bonus, and through Chairman Harrison of the senate finance committee, announces he will veto the Patman or Vinson bills if passed. The President, it is said, will not compromise, but is prepared for a "no-surrender" fight. The house rules committee has approved the Vinson, Patman and Tydings-Cochrane bills, and the big battle is ready to begin.

Let Our Motto Be GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD

Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

AGAIN, THE COMMON COLD

There isn't any other disease that is the cause of so much suffering, so many days' loss of work, so many deaths, as the common cold. That is why I speak of it again. If we could prevent the common cold, we should all be much happier.

Notice that I said "prevent." For all that thousands and thousands of doctors have been trying to find a cure for colds, no one so far has succeeded. So when people talk of a "cure" for a cold, they are talking about something that doesn't exist. If we begin drastic treatment of a head cold very early, we can sometimes shorten the course of the ailment. But the treatment must be started early, and we must stay home and take care of ourselves. For if the cold develops to the stage where there is an exudation or outflow of blood serum into the tissues in the wall of the nose, then we know of no way to abort or stop it.

If you keep up a reasonable amount of exercise, and have plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables in your diet, you can do much towards preventing colds.

People who have many head colds are apt to conduct their daily way of life much as follows: They sleep with all windows down tightly to keep out as much of the fresh air as they can. They get up late in the morning, hurriedly dress, eat some prepared dried indigestible so-called "breakfast food," drink a cup of coffee, and jump into the car and drive to work. They eat inside the building at noon, or drive home and drive back. They try to restrict the noon meal to a sandwich, coffee and a candy bar. They drive home after work, eat a heavy meal of meat, gravy, potatoes, bread, coffee, with cake and a big dish of ice cream for dessert. Then they play cards until they go to bed again in their closed, poorly ventilated rooms. No human machine can stand such punishment very long. The nasal mucous membrane may adjust itself in spite of this type of abnormal existence, but something will break soon. Usually the head colds are forerunners of more serious ailments.

The more we learn about medicine and health, the more we respect the practices of folk-lore. If you are beginning a head cold, then I know of no better treatment than that which was prevalent in southern Illinois in my grandmother's time. As soon as grandmother noticed that we were chilly and beginning to sneeze, she told us to undress. Then we were wrapped in a blanket and laid across the bed with our feet in a wash tub of hot water. Grandmother knelt by with one hand in the water and the other holding a teakettle of hot water from which she poured a slow but constant stream into the tub. Grandmother decided when the water was too hot; our protests availed nothing.

Next we were given a glass of hot sweetened vinegar water or hot lemonade, if lemons were procurable. After we had started sweating good and plenty, we were put into bed, given another glass of the same drink, wrapped up well, and allowed to sweat for one or two hours. Then dry covers were put on, and a long, sound, restful sleep was sure to follow. Grandmother called this "breaking up a cold," and she rarely failed.

Modern medical science says this is good treatment. The temperature sense of the skin is all upset at the beginning of a cold. The sneezing denotes that the membrane lining of the nose is extremely sensitive. Ordinary air irritates it, and you sneeze to expel a harmful substance. The purpose of the membrane lining is to prevent anything getting through the nasal air passages that will harm or damage the lower air tracts leading to the lung.

All the body surfaces, such as the skin, the lining of the nose and throat and the air passages, have an abnormal circulation at the beginning of a cold. The millions of tiny thread-like capillaries just beneath the surface are each acting as they please. They are like a large symphony orchestra with each instrument playing a different tune, when they should be in unison.

The increase of heat within our bodies induced by the hot foot bath, while wrapped up in blankets, helps to stabilize the controlling mechanism, and to bring some order out of the chaos.

The hot acidified drink warms us up inside, and supplies an acid to the stomach, which is weak in its secretory powers at this time, and helps it come back to normal.

Vaccines, as a cold preventive, have proved of value to a few people, but not many. The ultra-violet lamp, or artificial sunshine, is undoubtedly helpful in preventing colds, but it cannot replace hygienic living conditions. Outdoor exercise, balanced diet and mental as well as physical rest have to be combined with it.

Grandmother's treatment is, up to date, the best we know. But begin it early. After a head cold has been in progress for two days, it usually runs its course of seven to nine days at least.

Vagaries of Trade Rat Plague Camping Parties

Throughout the mountainous country of the West lives one of the most interesting members of the rat family. Fortunately this little creature is not despised as are other members of its family, for its peculiar antics and strange behavior around camps make it a source of amusement, but frequently annoyance, to the campers.

Its proper name is the bushy-tailed wood rat, and it resembles a squirrel more than a rat. It is also called the pack or trade rat, deriving these names from its behavior when it invades camp sites.

Persons unacquainted with this animal go through strange and bewildering experiences when camping in its territory. They may retire at night, snugly between their blankets, with their watches, coins, glasses and other precious possessions placed within easy reach, and on awakening in the morning find them missing. Or they may set their camp in shape before the day's hike and on their return at night find that spoons, knives, forks, tins of food and other small articles have gone the way of their watches and glasses. It is then they become acquainted with the trade rat, for usually this little fellow leaves something to mark his trail or identification. It may be a bone, a stick or other mountain refuse left in place of the stolen article. Careful, quiet watching for a short time brings results, for the marauder will return searching for other articles it can carry away. As soon as it finds what it wants, out to its cache it goes. This may be under a stone or brush pile and investigations usually reveal all of the stolen articles. It apparently has no choice in the goods it takes and will move anything it can carry, but seldom far away.—Detroit News.

Luppe Blank Funeral Will Be Held Friday Afternoon

OBITUARY—LUPPE BLANK

Luppe Blank, for forty-six years a resident of this locality, passed away at his home near Klemme on Monday morning. His health seemed to have been good for a man of his years and his sudden passing with heart failure was a shock to his family and friends.

Luppe Blank was born May 6, 1862, at Boen, Ostfriesland Germany. His parents, Roelf Thomas Blank and Gracka Fekkon Blank were members of the Reformed Church of Boen, where he was baptized and confirmed.

At the age of twenty-one the deceased was married to Elske Brink and six years later they migrated to America. Mr, Blank came first and after he found employment as a section hand, he sent for his wife and three children. The expense of crossing the ocean at this time was only $12.00 for an adult. The family established their home at Belmond where they lived for eight years.

After this the family started farming and for twenty-three years they operated as renters, always on farms in this locality. In 1920 they purchased the farm 1½ miles southeast of Klemme where they now reside.

Mr. Blank was a tall man, of good morals and strong. He loved to do heavy physical work and was never idle He was honest and fair in his dealings and his neighbors honored him by electing him director of the Klemme Co-op. Grain Co. and also director of our local Creamery.

Mr. Blank had reached the age of 72 years, 10 months and 26 days. He leaves of his immediate family: eight children, Grace, at home; John Kanawha; Ralph, at home; Mrs. Geo. LLOYD LAU GUESSED CORRECT WEIGHT OF FLOUR

Lloyd Lau, Klemme draryman, guessed the weight correctly of the big sack of flour in Thdaa's window Saturday night and so was given the sackful of flour. His guess was 294 pounds and 8 ounces, the exact weight.

The next closest guess was Ernest Nolte's, also 294 lbs. and 8 ounces and he received 2 sacks of flour. The third guess was Mrs. Carl Anderson's, also 294 pounds and 8 ounces and she received a sack of flour. The fourth best guess was A. J. Schoenwetter's who guessed two ounces higher, 294-10. He received a small sack off flour. Mrs. Alfred Merkel was fifth with her guess of 294-10 and she received a package of cake flour.

There was a large crowd on hand when the judges weighed the flour and tallied up the nearest guesses.

The highest guess recorded was was 878 pounds.

ALFALFA WINTER KILLING LESS THAN EXPECTED

Although there was much worry all over Iowa, about the ice sheet causing winterkilling of alfalfa, it was not serious, in general, this past season as was feared, asserts H. D. Hughes, head off the Farm Crops Department at Iowa State College.

Mr. Hughes states that comparatively little loss will result from the presence of the ice since the ground was well frozen and the plants were in their dormant stage. Some killing occurrd in bottomlands where the deepest layer off ice accumulated, but on the whole, most stands are starting out green this spring.

Where sands of alfalfa are thin, whether from winterkilling or original poor stands from seeding, every effort should be made to reseed as early as possible before the weeds start growing. The best method o reseeding is to drill the seed without any seedbed preparation just as soon as the ground is fit.

If a drill is not available, thin areas should be disced lightly. the seed broadcast and covered with a harrow. Fifteen pounds of seed per acre is considered a full seeding, but most of the stands in Iowa can be reseeded at a lower rate than this.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building — Washington, D. C.

Washington. — The President has placed Donald R. Richberg, his closest adviser, in the job as head of the National Recovery administration. Mr. Richberg will be chairman of the National Industrial Recovery board which has now been enlarged to the number of seven, and it is proposed that this group, divided between labor and capital representation, will guide the policies and programs as well as the enforcement of NRA.

Richberg's Job

It may be that Mr. Richberg's appointment should be given only passing notice. Political appointments in Washington are many and the addition of one more normally would not attract attention. It appears, however, that in this particular instance considerable significance should be attached to the appointment. It will have repercussions in more ways than one.

This brings us to the question of the future NRA. As we all know NRA legislation in the house and senate is encountering rough sailing. There are so many different ideas being put forward about the principle of NRA that thus far it has been exceedingly difficult to reconcile them. Since the present national industrial recovery act expires by limitation of law on June 16, congress faces the necessity of enactment of new legislation or allowing the present law to die and the codes under it to fall apart.

Selection of Mr. Richberg on the basis of these facts then would seem to indicate that Mr. Roosevelt had picked his best soldier to fight the battle; that Mr. Richberg, being eyes and ears for Mr. Roosevelt, would be the individual to guide the President in choice of policy and that his most trusted adviser would be the man to put forward details of the proposed NRA extension legislation. The undercurrent of gossip around Washington, however, indicates something else.

In the first instance, Mr. Richberg is in bad with organized labor, and he has shown no disposition lately to make peace, despite the fact that he was for years the representative of railway labor unions. Mr. Richberg it was who clashed with General Johnson and who is regarded, therefore, as indirectly responsible for General Johnson's resignation as national recovery administrator. The new chairman thus goes into his job with threatening clouds on several sides.

It will not be forgotten, either, that such valiant campaigners as Senator Carter Glass and Senator Borah, not to mention the alleged progressive, Senator Nye, are waiting for the NRA legislation in the senate. Mr. Richberg's hide will look to them the same as any other hide. It is just possible, therefore, as some observers have suggested, that Mr. Richberg may have been put out as the lamb on the sacrificial altar.

Indeed, color is lent to this supposition by the fact that Mr. Roosevelt has taken little direct interest in promoting legislation extending the life of NRA. Thus far he has said that he desired to have the extension granted, but he has not turned on the steam as he is equipped to do, and as he has done for bills that were personal hobbies with him. It is made to appear, therefore, that perhaps there will be a disintegration of NRA as such and that the functions desired by the administration to be retained will be parceled out, some to the federal trade commission, some to the Labor department, and others of lesser consequence scattered elsewhere.

While we are discussing legislation, it may be well to consider what is being done about the program of extending credit to home owners in cities and towns through the machinery of the home loan board. The house has passed a bill which will increase by two billion, eight hundred million dollars the amount of funds available for loans of this type by the Home Owners' Loan corporation. This sum was approximately a billion dollars more than the home loan board thought was necessary, but the sight or thought of so much money started the members of the house on something like a riot, so they made ample funds available.

Credit for Home Owners

From reports filtering through to Washington, I think there can be no question but what the home loan system has been of help in thousands of cases. Undoubtedly availability of government money in this matter has saved unnumbered home owners from loss of their property where short-sighted mortgage holders have insisted upon undue curtailment or absolute repayment of the borrowed money. Extension of the system probably has resulted also in reduction of general interest rates by private lenders of capital. If they wanted their money to work at all, they had to meet the government competition. Whether the principle of government loans is sound in normal times is another horse. Time alone can tell. The activity of congress, especially in the house, indicates that there is a demand of some kind or other for these loans in preference to private capital and that necessarily must be considered as an influential factor.

As the legislation increasing the lending power of the Home Owners Loan corporation has progressed, however, I have taken occasion to inquire into operations of the corporation which is wholly government owned. From all I can learn it stands out as the finest illustration of what politicians can do in the way of building political machines that I have seen in a score of years in the National Capital.

It will be remembered that upon creation of the board former Representative "Seaboard Bill" Stephenson of South Carolina was named chairman. Mr. Stephenson, being more honest about politics than many others, announced unequivocally that appointments were going to be made on a political basis. He created quite a furore and finally found himself sidetracked.

For a time we here in Washington have heard little about politics in the home loan system. It has developed, however, that politics was not dead, but sleeping.

The loan corporation in carrying out the idea or policy of decentralization did some very peculiar things, according to well authenticated reports. Actually, I am told, some young men without previous practical experience or training were supplied with copies of the home loan act, given a ticket and ordered to the hinterland to open designated regional offices. Shortly thereafter out of the thousands of employees in the home office of the loan corporation individuals were called into the office of the directing heads and were ordered to go to one or the other of the newly opened establishments. They were told at the same time that their salaries would be reduced. In addition, I am reliably informed, hundreds of them have suffered further salary reductions since they have been on their new jobs.

Peculiar Doings?

While all of this has been going on, the corporation set up a board of four members in the headquarters before which remaining employees in the Washington office have been called for examination. This board was announced as for the purpose of determining which of the employees should be retained. They wanted to be fair about it and wanted to keep on the payroll such of the employees as were unable to get along without the jobs they were holding. It seems, however, that that board has become an inquisitorial body absolutely without precedent in the character of examination to which it subjects the employees. The result is that few, if any, of the employees of the loan corporation entertain any belief that they can stay on their jobs with any feeling of safety.

For example, one man's experience is quoted. He was asked whether he had money in the bank, and he had none. He was asked whether any of his people were on the relief rolls, and they were not. Numerous other questions, such as the rate he paid for his board and room and the cost of his laundry were put to him. He then was asked if he carried life insurance, and his answer that he did apparently was wrong. Although he was not told directly, the inference of questions put to him was that he could live two months if he cashed in his life insurance policy. At any rate he was dismissed.

But this is not all. Included in the bill which increases the amount of funds that may be loaned by the corporation is a line of legislation that will have the effect of expanding politics in the organization. Written into that bill are instructions that the corporation shall recall to Washington all of those employees who were dispatched to new jobs in the regional, state or district offices. Of course, no one can say yet authoritatively that when these workers are recalled they will be dismissed here. That, however, obviously is the result.

Senator Gore of Oklahoma placed in the Congressional Record recently a telegram he had received and his reply to it that illustrates better than any recent incident how much courage is required by a national legislator to withstand the pressure from home. The occasion was consideration in the senate of the public works bill. The telegram received by the senator was signed by Joe A. Brown, the mayor of Hartshorne, Okla., and C. B. Lindsay, mayor of Halleyville, Okla. It follows:

Courage Needed

"Several thousand Pittsburgh county unemployed people assembled in convention demand you support President Roosevelt's four billion dollar relief measure. If you vote against measure, sentiment is, you stay out of this county next senatorial race."

The following is the senator's reply:

"This will acknowledge your exceedingly diplomatic and hospitable telegram. It shows how the dole spoils the soul. Your telegram intimates that your votes are for sale. Much as I value votes I am not in the market. I cannot consent to buy votes with the people's money. I owe a debt to the taxpayer as well as the unemployed. I shall discharge both. None but the bully resorts to threats and none but the coward yields to them."

The Bad Dream

By GERTRUDE von BERNUTH

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

IT WAS a stormy winter night. The wind blew a gale, the rain came down in torrents, and Cynthia Blake was all alone in the Long Island house.

Cynthia didn't like being alone, and on a night such as this she hated it. Especially since it had recently been in all the papers that David had gotten a fifty thousand dollar executor's fee from the Dodge estate. That made her nervous. But she lighted a log fire and settled down beside it with her book, hoping against hope that the time would pass quickly. David would be home by 11:30 anyhow.

Eight o'clock, nine o'clock—surely that clock must be slow!—ten o'clock—and the telephone rang. Cynthia sprang to answer it.

"I'd like to speak to Mrs. David Blake." It was a man's voice, businesslike, yet rather suave.

"This is Mrs. Blake," said Cynthia.

"Oh! Well, Mrs. Blake, I'm afraid I have some disturbing news for you."

"Yes?" said Cynthia, striving hard for self-control. Something had happened to David! "What is it?" she asked faintly.

"Er—Mr. Blake has had an accident." Cynthia gave one cry of anguish and then forced herself to listen.

"Mr. Blake was on his way home in a taxi, and his car skidded on Queensboro bridge. I happened to be driving by and stopped to see what had happened. Mr. Blake isn't seriously hurt, but they insisted upon taking him to Bellevue for examination and treatment. His one worry seemed to be about his wife, so I told him that I'd phone you. In fact, I told him that I'd gladly take you in to Bellevue, if you cared to go."

"Oh, would you? That's awfully kind of you!" cried Cynthia. Her one wish was to get to David, darling David. That was all that counted.

"How soon can you be ready, Mrs. Blake?" asked the voice.

"In five minutes! Oh you're sure that my husband's not badly hurt?" she implored. "You're telling me the truth, aren't you?"

"Mr. Blake is not badly hurt. He may have a broken rib or two, but—"

"Come on, come on, cut it out," broke in a rough voice. "We ain't got much . . ."—then silence, as if a hand had been suddenly placed over the mouthpiece. Then:

"That was some one who wants this booth, Mrs. Blake. I'll be there inside of fifteen minutes. Good-by."

As Cynthia put the receiver back on the hook, she was puzzled. Her fear about David seemed to have vanished. She began to be her usual cool-headed self. That other voice, so rough and snarling. "Come on, come on, cut it out. We—"

Cynthia raced upstairs to the extension phone beside her bed.

"Pennsylvania-6-3500," she said, speaking into the mouth piece again. "Hello, hello, is this the Bar association? Is Mr. Blake there this evening—Mr. David Blake? He was to be in conference with—"

"Yes, Mr. Blake is here. He's in room 510. I'll connect you with him if you wish."

"If you please," said Cynthia.

"Mr. Blake, please," said the voice. And then David's voice saying hello.

"Dave is that you?"

"Certainly it's I. What's up?"

"And are you all right?"

"All right? Of course I'm all right. What's the matter with you? I'm just starting for home."

"O. K." said Cynthia, and hung up the receiver.

"Operator, I want the police," she said, taking down the receiver again.

"I'll connect you," said the operator. Her voice sounded excited.

"Police station, One Hundred and ninth precinct. What is it?" asked a man's voice.

"Officer," said Cynthia. "This is Mrs. David Blake, at 20 Weybridge road, Bayside, Long Island. I have just had a phone call from a stranger who tells me that my husband has had an automobile accident and wants me to come to him in Bellevue hospital. The man said he would be here in fifteen minutes to take me to my husband. I have since located my husband by telephoning and he's perfectly all right. But I thought, if the man comes, I'd like to have the police."

"Humph! A snatch! We'll have some one there inside of three minutes, lady. Don't be scared. Take it easy."

Cynthia hung up the receiver with fingers that trembled. That was that. Now what? She sat tense listening for sounds outside, and finally heard a car coming up the road. Which is it, she wondered, the 'snatcher' or the police? She shivered a little.

Just then the telephone rang again.

"This is Dave again," said her husband's voice. "I'm phoning from the Long Island station. Is anything wrong out there? I'm worried."

Suddenly Cynthia heard a commotion outside, and a shot rang out. "'S all right, I dropped him," shouted a voice. "Where's the other one? Did he get away?"

"He won't get far. I blew his front tire, and the other boys are just coming up the road. They'll get him."

"Cynthia!" shouted David. "Is anything the matter? You're acting awfully queer. Why did you call me at the Bar association?"

"Oh, I fell asleep by the fire and had a bad dream," said Cynthia. "Tell you about it when you get home."

Best Conditions for Home Study

How Evening Work Can Be Made Easier for the Small Student.

By MARY G. McCORMICK

Supervisor of Health Teaching, New York State Department of Education.

Home study is one of the relics of a harsher and less enlightened age in education. In many up-to-date school systems home study has long ago been abolished, but in others the child is still condemned to pass his evenings laboring over school work that should have been locked behind him in the classroom or study hall.

In such cases parents should see that the home work is done under the best possible physical and mental conditions, so that it will result in the least harm to the child's health.

Among the items to be considered in providing proper conditions for home study are proper lighting, proper seating, ventilation of the room, and quiet. The home work should be illuminated by a good bright light, preferably white shining from the rear and slightly above the head of the child. If the material sets up a glare, he should wear an eye shade. The child should be seated in a comfortable chair with a straight back so that he will not be tempted to slouch down or sit in a position which is bad for his health. He should be encouraged to sit up straight.

If the home work consists of reading a book, the book should be held in the hand, rather than placed upon a table, and the printed page should be 12 to 14 inches from the eyes.

If a table is used, the table and chair should be so adjusted in height that the child will not need to bend over his work or to hunch his shoulders. His feet should touch the floor. If the chairs available in the home are too tall for this, a thick book may be placed at his feet for a foot-rest.

Suddenly Polite
Why? He Is Prepared
Thought for Atheists
Strange Hangings

How politely Germany is treated, suddenly, by the "victorious allies"! Recently Germany was kicked around, all her money taken by the allies, French and English soldiers camping on her territory at her expense, the Versailles treaty sternly enforced.

Arthur Brisbane

What a change now! England sends a clever statesman to talk it over with Hitler the moment he throws the Versailles treaty on to the rubbish heap.

France is almost polite in messages to Germany. No more threats; no more "Do as we say!"

You know what causes this. Hitler lets it be known that he has been preparing for a war in case anybody wants one; that Germany has a well drilled army of half a million men and an enormous fleet of commercial airplanes that could drop explosive bombs and poison gas most conveniently.

In other words, Germauy is prepared, willing, ready and able to fight if anybody insists on it.

So nobody insists.

There may be a lesson there for this country, that, if attacked, could only throw a few lumps of gold at the enemy and plead: "Please be nice."

Flying is like human life in this, you do not see what it is that pulls you along through the upper air.

You look at the three engines, sticking out into space ahead of you, and see no sign of power, nothing to explain the speed and climbing power or what it is that keeps you aloft.

The propellers move at a speed that makes them invisible. You know that you move, but do not see what moves you.

A clergyman might find a text for atheists in that. Your atheist, or gentleman from Senegambia, would say: "Do not talk to me of a trinity of propellers that haul me to my destination and my destiny. If there were any such propellers I should see them."

In Austria, Nazis are supposed to have murdered the Austrian chancellor, Dollfuss. Now the government that succeeds Dollfuss will hang 17 Nazis as a start. There is nothing novel in that. Where you have dictatorship you have wholesale killings. They go together.

The interesting thing is the method of hanging in Austria. They have no "drop" which causes the criminal to break his neck by the jerk of his own weight. A noose is put around the criminal's neck, and as he hangs "assistant executioners" pull at his feet until he chokes to death. It must be a disagreeable spectacle, even for the "assistant executioners."

Learned professors tell you the saying "beautiful but dumb" is silly, untrue. On the contrary, beauty and intelligence go together. Also, there is no intelligence that is not beautiful in itself.

Follow intelligence up through the animal kingdom. Your female gorilla is a horribly ugly creature. The chimpanzee, more intelligent, is less ugly. The lowest female savage, horrible to look at, is less atrociously ugly than the female chimpanzee, and so on all the way up.

Convicts at work in a California county road camp, in Elizabeth canyon, rebelled "because they had no hashed-brown potatoes" for breakfast. It was a substantial breakfast—prunes, cereal, griddle cakes, but no hashed-brown potatoes.

Men change. When Parmentier, for whom the excellent potato soup, potage Parmentier, is named, brought the first potatoes to France nobody would eat them.

An intelligent king ordered the nobles at court to wear potato blossoms in their buttonholes in the spring. Immediately the common people said, "Potatoes must be good" and ate them.

The name suggested for a new state, that would be number forty-nine, is "Absaroka," a name and state to be created by putting together western North Dakota, the northern third of Wyoming and one row of counties along the southern border of Montana.

That dreadful name chosen for this forty-ninth state, "Absaroka," is the name of the Crow Indian nation.

As long as it is to be one of the United States, why not select a United States name, Lincoln, Edison, or some other with a meaning?

Two Americans, Mr. and Mrs. Switz from East Orange, N. J., with twenty alleged accomplices, accused of spying for Russia, will be tried in Paris within a few days. The Switzes and others are accused of informing "a foreign power" of French secrets concerning high explosives, planes built to fly through the stratosphere and across the Atlantic in six hours, and "chemical warfare secrets," which means recipes for more deadly gases.

Quitting Time

Men past seventy are still to be found at their desks, doing hard work every every day.

Many of them are so "gaited" that they would be very unhappy if they took the time to loaf.

But I believe that every man and woman should during the active working years think of lessening labor as old age approaches.

They may not want to retire when they are past sixty. But they ought to be able to retire if they want to.

Nothing is more pathetic than the spectacle of an elderly man or woman trying to match in energy the younger people around them, and feeling certain that they are doomed to fail.

This is not written for the old, but for the young.

To the young the world seems a long stretch ahead of youth.

But that youth cannot be maintained without planning for its maintenance.

* * * * * * *

If you will persuade yourself that you, like every one else in this world, are not so young as you used to be, perhaps you will be a little more saving of your health as well as of your money.

I have always heard the Scotch were thrifty to a fault.

But when I went to Scotland I found that, while they certainly were thrifty, their thrift was not penuriousness, but a mere sensible provision for the future.

They have lived and done their work in a climate that is quite as dour as many members of their race.

They have learned by experience that the struggle is hard, and they get ready to make it less hard in old age, by counting their pennies, and putting temptation to spend money behind them.

In America, where for many years money was made easily, it was spent more easily. The result was that Americans acquired the spending habit.

They bought more of everything than they needed. They sought to make a show of their wealth.

They tried to keep up with neighbors who were far more affluent than they were.

They have learned better now, but the lesson has been a hard one.

I think in the future that they will be a little more thrifty, a little more awake to the wisdom of making provision for old age.

* * * * * * *

Unless you are a doctor, and a good one, you know very little about the complicated machine which is your body.

Sick People

Today, fortunately for the public, there are more and better doctors than there have ever been before.

Make use of them. It has been said that the man who doctors himself has a fool for his physician.

You probably have found that by taking plenty of exercise, getting out in the open now and then, and not eating things that disagree with you that you will be tolerably well.

But that is not enough.

You ought to be extremely well. Unless you are you cannot do your best work, and if you cannot do your best work you are likely to be a loser in life.

* * * * * * *

Get yourself a doctor. Get a good one.

Let him look you over every so often, as is done in the life extension institutions.

Follow his advice. Get him to explain to you as much of the marvelous system you possess as you understand.

Naturally you want to live long.

I have never known anyone who does not. Well, then, try to live long.

And when you get to feeling "low" drop in at the physician's, let him test out the machine and find out what is the matter with it.

Today there are many great hospitals, with staffs of able physicians, all of them specialists in their own line.

If you are in bad health go to one of them and let members of the staff tell you what's the matter and what to do about it.

They and the men who have gone before them have amassed a vast store of knowledge, and it is their business to pass it along to you.

Moreover, don't let a youngster grow up without regular inspection by a man who knows about human bodies, and how to help them to grow healthy and strong.

Give a youngster the right kind of a physical start, and half the battle for his future existence has been fought.

That will not only provide him with a good chance in life, but it will insure him against many of the ills which sometimes blight childhood irreparably.

I am not a doctor, or related to a doctor.

But I have seen them do such splendid work, not only in building healthy bodies, but in averting so many illnesses, that I cannot help now and then rooting for them, and urging everybody I know to give them a chance to show what they can do, and how much misery that may come in after life they can avert with their learning and skill.

Err in Attempts to "Push" Child

Young Folks Need Time to Develop Their Power of Attainment.

"We are hipped, we Americans, with the passion for early success and youthful achievements," so writes one of the best known, experienced, and successful critics, "H. T. P." It is a sentence to give pause to parents' thoughts. There is something stimulating to them in the realization that their children are proving their ability while still youthful. In imagination they see these, their offsring, spurring ahead, not only of those of their own age, but overtaking and forging ahead of those of more mature years and of wider experience.

When a child is a genius, or especially gifted or talented, he, (or she), is able to grasp with amazing rapidity the meaning of instructions and to acquire technique at a very early age which would otherwise be beyond him. With this mental and physical equipment there is also a quality, not to be gauged by years, for it is ageless. But geniuses are rare, despite the fact that many parents consider their children belong to the limited company. It is wiser to be slow in such classification, while nurturing and cherishing what seems to be a spark of the "Divine fire" found in geniuses. Above all, care for the health of such promising youths and give them every possible opportunity for proper development of the ability.

Apart from these exceptional children, there is the vast majority, the normal average. These children may be slow in developing their powers. They require time to lay the right foundation, if they are to have sufficient technique to amount to anything worth while. It is a mistake to be "hipped with the passion for early success and youthful achievement." Give the young folks time to prove themselves. So long as they don't settle down to contentment with mediocrity they are working toward some fulfillment. To put pressure on them may stunt the development of their powers. Provide as suitable an environment as possible for their progress and encourage rather than urge them to go forward.

This waiting game on the part of parents is not easy, especially when they see others rising. The consolation to them has to come from the realization that achievement is laid on a cumulative foundation. Rome was not built in a day, but it was being built continually and steadily. It was neither a lazy nor a makeshift process, but a steady rising. Parents have the right to expect something of their children, but unless they foster abilities and do not push the youngsters ahead before they are ready, they may frustrate their own hopes.

AVERY—The Home of Hits!

Little Known Delhi Is Richest Street in World

What is the richest street in the world? Without taking into account the environs of the London Stock Exchange and Wall Street, New York, where unseen fortunes change hands, the little-known Chandni Chowk in Delhi has substantial claims. It has often been referred to as the richest street in Asia, and, unlike our own commercial thoroughfares, the greater part of its wealth is there for all to see. But many are the treasures which are hidden away in secret recesses of the shops of curio dealers and jewelers in that picturesque street.

One of the dealers, the walls of whose establishment are covered with letters of appointment from highnesses and excellencies of all descriptions, has manufactured countless wonderful golden and jeweled embroideries for crowned heads and ruling princes. He was responsible for the historic peacock gown, costing no less than £1,000, which the late Lady Curzon wore at the Durbar ball, attended by 4,000 guests in the Delhi Fort in 1908. Here also are all the richest of the embroidery merchants, whose cloths and cloaks, scintillating with costly ornaments, are not only intended for reigning princes, but for state elephants. Here, too, are the carvers of ivory, and the traveler can see them exhibiting their skill in evolving delicate figures and animals from solid blocks of ivory, sawn from elephants' tusks.—Montreal Herald.

Reservoir Keeps Tab on Height, Phones Figures

One of the queerest telephone numbers is on Biddulph, a tiny exchange near Hanley, Staffordshire, says the Montreal Herald. Anyone phoning this number suddenly hears a weird and powerful voice repeating at short intervals: "Six-four. . . . Six-four. . . . Six-four . . ." or some other figures. It is the voice of a reservoir. Over a thousand feet above sea-level, on the top of Mow Cop, is the reservoir of Congleton Urban district council.

Every day a reading has to be obtained of the height of the water in the reservoir. To save the strenuous climb up the hill, the council officials installed a device which automatically speaks the height of the water to anyone telephoning. The secret of the apparatus is a gramophone record. The moment the phone bell rings a telephone receiver alights on the record. This receiver is connected to a float on the surface of the water. As the height of the water varies, so does the place where the receiver alights. The record then "talks" the exact figure into the telephone receiver. It repeats it eight times, and then rings off. The phone number of the reservoir—23—is listed in the directory. The "voice" is perfectly distinct on a trunk call from London.

Types of Boats

A schooner is a fore-and-aft rigged vessel, originally and still typically having two masts, with the smaller sail on the foremast and the mainmast stepped nearly amidships. Catboat—a one-masted sailboat having its mast stepped well forward, carrying a single fore-and-aft sail extended by a gaff and boom and usually having a centerboard. Yawl—a small vessel rigged like a cutter, with the addition of a jigger mast. Sloop—a single-masted fore-and-aft rigged vessel carrying a mainsail and a jib and often a staysail and gaff-topsail. It has also a fixed bowsprit, topmast and standing rigging. Ketch—a strongly built two-masted vessel, fore-and-aft rigged similar to a yawl except that the mizzenmast of the ketch is stepped forward of the rudderpost.

Home of Coffee

Ethiopia is the original home of coffe. The tree was first found there by Arab travelers in the province of Kafa, from which the beverage takes its name. Seed was taken from Kafa to the Mocha district in Arabia. In Kafa and adjoining parts of southwestern Ethiopia may be seen vast and virgin forests of coffee. The tree grows without care. Thousands of tons of berries fall to the ground in waste every year.

Ants Are Loyal

The ant specializes in loyalty, cooperation and devotion to the highest ideals in the art of living together. It has made the female boss! The lowly termite sterilizes all the male offspring, but the husband of the queen, and sets these eunuchs to mopping up the kitchen looking after the dining room and nursery and building defenses for the termitary. There are no lounge lizards among termites.

Banking 100 Years Ago

One hundred years ago there was a perfect mania for banking in the country, riots often occurring when stock in a new bank was offered. To open a bank was the panacea for almost every ill. Men would associate themselves together when badly in debt and open up a bank to relieve themselves of indebtedness. When a fire occurred of any great proportion, a bank was created to relieve the sufferers.

Sheep Dogs Are Loyal

Happiest when at their work, sheep dogs, serving their master through sheer love of pleasing him, can be expected to have affectionate dispositions. Their work further accentuates the loyalty and willingness to protect the master's property with their life, if necessary. Wariness of strangers also is inherited.

First Cannon Tubes of Metal or Made of Wood

Early war engines included the catapult, employing twisted fiber or hair for propelling power; the ballista, a largesized catapult, and the onager, a machine employing the principle of the springboard for projecting missiles, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune. A small catapult had a range of about 400 yards, a larger and heavier one a greater maximum range. Missile engines took various forms as they were developed up to the time of the invention of gunpowder, though it is doubtful whether any of them had a greater range than the 1,000 yards of the superengines invented by Archimedes.

The introduction of gunpowder into the business of war in Europe early in the Fourteenth century changed completely both weapons and missiles, though the change was not so abrupt as might be supposed. For a long time, for instance, the old missile engines remained almost the equal of early cannon, and the longbow stood as superior to the earliest small arms employing powder. Cannon were invented before muskets and pistols. First cannon were called bombards and were nothing more than tubes of metal or tubes of wood bound with metal. These bombards, some of which were constructed to great proportions and capable of hurling missiles weighing as much as 1,800 pounds, had a maximum range of not more than 2,000 yards, a majority, however, shooting extreme distances of much less than that.

Palestine Battleground of Countless Opposing Hosts

Standing always at the crossroads of Africa and Asia, it has been Palestine's fate to serve as a battleground of foreign hosts and as a center of turbulent passions, notes a writer in the Washington Post. The succession of majestic figures that have moved across the canvas of the Holy Land, portrayed in the powerful narratives of the Old and New Testaments, have kept this land yet the Land of the Bible.

In Palestine there are unforgettable contrasts in attire, speech, habits and manner of life. The Bedouin in flowing garb drives a line of solemn camels in stately caravan side by side with the speeding automobile and within sound of the droning airplane. Four thousand years of history link up the Palestine of today with the Canaan of old. In the Bedouin one sees the wild and free shepherds of the days when Canaan was a pastoral land. The Arab peasant may well be the prototype of the tiller of the soil of yore. In the Christian Arabs of Bethlehem and Nazareth one will recall the picturesque epoch of the Crusaders. And in the industrial and agricultural activity of the Jews is the era when Israel was a nation.

It is only from the Fourteenth century B. C. that Palestine's history becomes more definite. In the ensuing centuries many changes have taken place, yet through the ages, each fresh chapter of its history has been recorded, to remain a part of the mysterious East.

The Palomino Horse

The term palomino is simply one word used to describe the painted horse, that is, a horse showing regular markings of white and black, or white and another color, in some instances of three colors. The painted horse so common in the West is a descendant of the Spanish horse brought to America by the Spanish conquistadores. The striking coloration has not resulted from any careful breeding. On the contrary horses of this type are allowed to run on the range for a part of the year as a rule, and their breeding has been rather a matter of chance.

Waterfowl Destroyed

At the completion of a survey made by the United States biological survey and Canada, jointly, covering a period of some twenty years, beginning in 1900 and ending in 1929, it was brought to light that 90 per cent of all species of waterfowl that once existed on the North American continent has been destroyed during the period of construction and destruction since the country was first inhabited by the civilized race.

Where Cold Weather Comes From

Cold weather comes from the north southward in the form of cold air masses, or highs, which flow out of the Arctic basin, says an authority. The most frequent path into the United States is down the basin of the McKenzie river through western Canada, across Montana and the Dakotas, and gradually turning eastward. The Northwest gets the full shock of them and consequently is normally the coldest part of the country.

English Longbow Good Weapon

Old manuscripts say of the English longbow of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth centuries that its full cast was 300 yards. That was with an arrow with a sharpened steel broadhead point or with a bodkin point, a missile sufficiently strong and heavy to pierce armor at short range or fell a man at a distance almost as great as its maximum carry.

Lotteries Paved Streets

Many of the early roads and streets in Philadelphia were paved with money from sanctioned lotteries. The state legislature, to prevent increase of taxes, authorized a lottery in 1791 to raise $30,000 for construction of the Philadelphia and Lancaster Turnpike, now the National highway.

Viola Has Part All Its Own in Orchestra Work

The viola is exactly like the violin, except that it is one-fifth larger and has heavier strings, notes a writer in the Washington Post. It is tuned a fifth below the violin, its strings thus giving C, G, D and A, the deepest tone being an octave below middle C on the piano.

The viola is played in a manner similar to that used for the violin, except for the greater stretches in fingering, due to the greater length of the strings.

The dull, mournful tone of the viola comes from the fact that its strings are thick. The extra depth is attained by increasing the thickness of the strings, which always makes the tone less brilliant. Thus, the viola gets a tone color of brooding melancholy.

The viola plays the third part in the string quartet, which consists of a first and second violin, a viola, and a violoncello. This does not mean that it is always below the two violins in pitch, for the string quartet depends upon interest and variety in the leading of its four parts, and sometimes the viola may be playing the highest note of a chord.

In orchestral work the viola has much the same duty. It is often called upon for its special tone color, but usually it is found playing in four-part harmony with the first and second violins and violoncellos. In the Eighteenth century its role was more humble, and it was often compelled to follow the bass viol.

Poplar Tree Is Beaver's Favorite Along Streams

Beavers are as easy to raise as sheep or pigs. They are more profitable and give less trouble. The beaver flourishes wherever the poplar grows, and was once very much at home all over the continent from the Mexican border north, excepting only the deserts of the south and the sub-arctic barrens. For the native it was an important source of food and warm clothing, and the value of its pelts was responsible for attracting the advance guard of civilization. For a century the beaver skin was the standard of value among the dwellers of the frontier.

As engineers their architectural ingenuity is sufficient to enable them to withstand their natural enemies, the bear, the wolf, the bob-cat, the wolverine and the otter. But they are not nearly so intelligent as it is generally supposed. In fact they are so easily trapped as to be the most difficult animals to protect.

In their wild condition they are friendly and sociable among themselves, but regard other beavers and all other living things as enemies.

Alloys Compete With Steel

Light alloys of non-metallic resins that have a strength comparable with steel are strong competitors of metals. These substances have long been associated with pipe stems, lunch trays, bracelets, and other novelties, but now they are being made into castings for heavy manufacturing equipment with success. Used with asbestos filler, resins can be molded into pieces of almost any size. The resulting "castings" are much lighter than similar ones of iron.

Family Habits Handed Down

Hundreds of family habits are handed down not by physical or mental heredity but by "Social heredity," notes a writer in the Detroit News. Ability to swim or play games unusually well is largely due to physical heredity but all healthy people play games passably well entirely from custom. Eating with one's knife or talking loud in depots and on trains or gossiping about neighbors runs in some families but fortunately is not inborn.

Marginal Land Defined

The National Land Use Planning committee defined marginal land as "land where the agricultural output just balances input, including a proper allowance for depreciation and interest on capital other than land and labor of the operator and his family. Submarginal land is that where output falls below the balance, and supermarginal land, that where output rises above."

The Granby Token

The Granby token (1787) was a private copper coinage issued by John Higley of Granby, Conn., where there were copper mines, afterward used as Tory prisons and workshops. The obverse was a deer, with the legend, "Value Me As You Please"; Roman numerals III and crescent. The reverse was three hammers on a triangular field, each surmounted by a crown, and with the legend, "I Am Good Copper."

Rifles of Civil War Days

In the American Civil war troops of both the North and South were armed with rifles, shooting elongated bullets rounded at the nose rather than the old round bullets of the long rifle. Most of the rifles of that period were muzzle-loaders, though as the war progressed breechloading rifles were introduced from time to time.

Copper and Lead

Sheet copper and lead are the metals most commonly used in roofing. Repairs and replacement of roof and chimney flashing can more safely be done with these metals than with cheaper materials which will rust out in a few years. The same is true for the gutters and rain spouts.

Romans Ruled, Occupied Britain for 367 Years

It is not always realized that the Romans occupied and ruled Britain for 367 years—from A. D. 43 to A. D. 410—a period longer than the time which has passed since the coming of the Spanish Armada, says Tit-Bits Magazine. During those centuries a high civilization was established, the country being opened up by splendid roads connecting many walled cities. In the Undercroft of All Hallows church—the home of Toe H—near the Tower, may be seen an interesting model of London as it was in the Fourth century. There, too, is an actual portion of the floor of a Roman shop of the time of Boadicea, A. D. 59.

Portions of the Roman wall, pierced by six gates—Aldgate, Bishopsgate, Cripplegate, Aldersgate, Newgate, and Ludgate—still exist near the thoroughfare called London Wall. The Roman bridge across the river was situated about 200 yards lower than the present London bridge, and the Tower of London was erected by William the Conqueror at the point where the wall left the river. Most of the country outside the walls was forest or marsh.

Ludgate led the citizens to the settlement of Westminster, where there was a ford across the Thames, and, on the way thither, south of the present site of St. Clement's church, was a Roman bath, still to be seen, and still fed by its original spring water.

Genghis Kahn, Mongol Boy Ruler, Suffered Reverses

A boy ruler who suffered great reverses in his early days, to recover and by his conquests change the history of most of Asia and a large portion of Europe was Genghis Khan, Mongol emperor. Born in 1162, observes a writer in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, he became ruler of a powerful group of Mongol tribes when he was thirteen years old, succeeding his father. Several tribes dispersed when the boy became their head, and for years he struggled to maintain his position, by subduing disaffections and overcoming the hostility of neighboring tribes. He was constantly at war until 1206 by which time he had built up his strength enough to proclaim himself emperor of Mongolia. He then shattered the forces of his strongest enemy on the Mongolian steppes, overran the Chinese empire, marched south and conquered large portions of what is now Turkey and Persia and India, and drove back the Russians in Georgia. He died in 1227 while successfully extending his control in China, the head of one of the largest empires the world has known. But the empire fell apart on his death.

Rome's Early Population

There wasn't any painstaking government census in Caesar's day, but there exist enumerations of houses and various other reckonings upon which estimates of the population of the ancient city have been based—estimates which vary widely. Edward Gibbon, author of "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," gave the city an estimated population of 1,200,000 in the early days of the Christian era. Other writers place the population of the city at that time as high as 12,000,000 or 14,000,000 and the number of houses at 2,000,000 or 3,000,000. But all calculations are liable to be erroneous because of the conjectural allowance of the inhabitants to each house.

Outlet for Trinidad Cocoa

On the far northeast corner of Trinidad, cut off from the rest of the island by the rugged mountains of the Northern range, lies the seaport village of Toco—outlet for much of the produce of the vast cocoa and coconut estates situated in that part of the colony—a self-sufficient hamlet. Many residents of Toco have never been as far from home as Port-of-Spain, or seen a train or tramcar. On the other hand, a large percentage of Trinidadians have never seen Toco, and practically no visitors at all ever get that far afield, although the drive there is one of the most beautiful and interesting in the island.

Depth of Lake Superior

As might naturally be expected, Lake Superior, the largest of the Great Lakes, is deeper than its smaller companion lakes, Lake Michigan and Lake Huron. At least depth measurements taken of these waters by the geology division of the department of conservation indicate this. One point in Lake Superior northeast of Keweenaw peninsula is 1,008 feet deep, these measurements show. The greatest depths recorded for Lake Michigan and Lake Huron, on the other hand, are 924 feet and 750 feet respectively.—Detroit News.

Drowned in Wine

One of the few "wine executions" in history took place in London in 1478. After George, the duke of Clarence, had been sentenced to death, his brother, King Edward IV, graciously permitted him to choose the manner in which he wished to die. The duke asked to be drowned—in good liquor. So on the day of his execution he was officially tossed into a large cask of Malmsey wine.—Vincent Rafferty, Metnuen, Mass., in Collier's Weekly.

The "liquid test"

...It ENDS bowel worries for many people

This is a test that tells you whether the system needs a cathartic change. If you have constant sluggish spells or bilious attacks, and laxatives seem to make things worse, it would be wise to try this:

Stop all use of any laxative that does not encourage variation from a "fixed dose" (which may be entirely too large a dose for your individual need). Use instead, a liquid laxative that you can measure and regulate as to dose. As necessary to repeat, take smaller doses, less and less often, until the bowels are moving without any help at all.

Doctors use liquid laxatives, and a properly prepared liquid laxative, containing natural laxative agents like senna and cascara is a joy and a comfort; a real help in establishing regularity. Ask your doctor about this! (Doctors use liquid laxatives.) You can get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which is a most dependable liquid laxative, at any drug store.

FRANCE AND ITALY MOBILIZE ARMIES AS CONFERENCES BEGIN AT BERLIN.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

CHANCELLOR HITLER'S virtual threats of war, though coupled with protestations of peaceful intention, are having their effect in almost every nation on earth. In his own land the result is probably one of his main objectives, for the Germans, in their loud rejoicings over the military rebirth of the reich and regaining of its old position, are losing sight of the grave economic problems which the reichsfuehrer has not yet been able to solve.

Anthony Eden

France, having decreed the enlarging of its army and the increase in the term of conscription, began moving fully half of the troops heretofore placed along the Italian frontier to the Rhine area. Premier Mussolini of Italy, as minister of war, ordered the recall of the entire military class of 1911, estimated at 220,000 men. These additions bring the strength of the army up to approximately 675,000, and when the more than 400,000 Fascist militia are included, the Italian forces number more than a million. The class of 1913, due to be dismissed soon, is being kept under arms. Mussolini made a hot speech to the nation in which he said Italy was ready "for any threat of war" and that "our desire for peace and European collaboration is based upon some millions of bayonets."

According to a Rome paper that usually speaks with authority, there will soon be held an Anglo-Franco-Italian conference to discuss the re-armament of Austria, Bulgaria, and Hungary. This has heretofore been opposed by the countries of the little entente, but it is supposed their views have been altered by recent developments.

Even in the United States the sentiment for at least adequate defense has been spurred. The senate and house conferees reached an agreement on the $400,000,000 War department appropriation bill. The house conferees receded from a proposal to give the President discretionary authority as to the rate of increasing the army's strength to 165,000 men. The senate plan providing that the increase shall begin at once was adopted. The proposed increase, recommended by the War department as necessary to bring the army up to the "least allowable minimum" was the major new provision of the bill but it represented a gain in total appropriations of more than $70,000,000 above last year.

As a preliminary to this meeting there was an important conference in Paris participated in by Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal; Fulvio Suvich, Italian under-secretary of foreign affairs; and Foreign Minister Laval of France. Laval sought to stiffen the British attitude toward Hitler, but Eden tried to turn him from his determination not to deal with Germany until the League of Nations has passed on France's protest of German violation of the Versailles treaty. It is understood France proposed to impose severe economic penalties on Germany but that Eden persuaded Laval that such measures should be delayed until they had been debated at the coming meeting of the powers at Como, Italy. This conference was postponed for some days to give Eden time to go to Moscow.

RESTRICTIONS on planting spring wheat have been removed by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, who fears the effect of another widespread drouth. The year's first crop report showing that farmers intend to plant 17,847,000 acres of spring wheat is said to be responsible for Wallace's about face. Last year the acreage was 18,521,000 acres. The administration is convinced that the government and farmers have a duty to protect consumers against a wheat shortage, he said. Farmers will plan an additional 900,000 to 2,300,000 acres as a result of the new order, and will harvest between ten and thirty million bushels more, Wallace estimates. Spring wheat normally constitutes about one-fourth of the nation's crop. He denied that the European situation pointing to a possibility of increased sales had anything to do with the new decision. Farmers under contract who plant their full spring wheat acreage will receive full benefit payments, but in return will be required to agree to reduce production in 1930 by the amount asked in next year's contract plus the amount they would have reduced this year. There is no indication that the corn acreage control program for 1935 will be altered.

THE Belcher case, regarded as the government's strongest test of NRA'S constitutionality, will be dropped, according to reports from Washington. It will be recalled that William E. Belcher, Alabama lumber mill owner, was alleged to have paid employees less than the lumber code minimum wage, and to have kept them employed eight hours a week more than the code maximum. Belcher did not deny the charges, but attacked the constitutionality of NRA legislation. He was sustained in a demurrer by Judge William Grubb, whose recent ruling that TVA may not sell power in competition with private utilities gave scant comfort to the administration. The Supreme court's decision in the Belcher case has been regarded as very important since it would go directly to the question of NRA's validity, and would make or break government control of industry.

JAPAN steps out of the League of Nations and flanked by her single avowed ally, Manchukuo, she faces the world as the self-chosen preserver of peace in the Orient. Japan's action is the culmination of a series of events started February 24, 1933, when Yosuke Matsuoka led the entire Japanese delegation in a walkout from the league assembly. Shortly after, Japan gave formal notice of her withdrawal from the league because the assembly had censured Japanese aggression in Manchuria. She has advised other powers that she considers herself guardian of peace in eastern Asia, and that outside assistance is neither desired nor invited. In addition, Japan has embarked on an armament policy marked by denunciation of the Washington naval treaty, demands for naval parity with Great Britain and the United States, and armed forces "sufficient to defend, but inadequate to attack."

HERBERT HOOVER suddenly projected himself into the political picture, and set wagging the tongues of countless politicians and observers. In a letter addressed to the California Republican assembly, meeting in Sacramento, the former President spoke his mind with utmost freedom concerning the doings of the Roosevelt administration "whose theories, he asserted, "are no longer a propagandized millennium; they are self-exposed." The Republican party, said Mr. Hoover, has today the greatest responsibility that has come to it since the days of Abraham Lincoln—to raise the standard in defense of fundamental American principles; and he called for a rejuvenated and vigorous Republican organization.

Herbert Hoover

Here are some of the things Mr. Hoover said in arraigning the present administration:

"The most solemn government obligations have been repudiated.

"The nation is faced with the greatest debt ever known to our country.

"The currency has been rendered uncertain.

"The government has been centralized under an enormous bureaucracy in Washington . . . small business men have been disabled and crushed. Class conflicts have been created and embittered.

"The cost of living is steadily advancing.

"More people are dependent upon the government for relief than ever before.

"Recovery is still delayed."

Leaders of the regular Reublicans in Washington were quick to declare their approval of Mr. Hoover's attack on the New Deal. Most of them scouted the idea that he was tentatively looking toward another nomination, but the general impression was that he was in the way of becoming the leader of his party in fact as well as in name.

CONSIDERABLY mutilated, the administration's $4,880,000,000 work relief bill finally got through the senate by a vote of 68 to 16, and was returned to the house later, to be adjusted in conference. The senators accepted an amendment by Senator Thomas of Oklahoma for a currency expansion of $375,000,000 through the issuance of silver certificates at the $1.29 an ounce monetary value of the treasury's silver stocks instead of the present practice of using the purchase value of the silver. However, it was confidently expected this would be stricken out in the conference. Previously the senate rejected Senator's Wheeler's amendment for $4,000,000,000 of new currency to finance the works program.

Another amendment which was adopted was that offered by McCarran of Nevada requiring senate confirmation of all officials receiving $5,000 or more who would have charge of expenditure of the fund.

One of the efforts to specify the use of part of the huge work fund was given the approval of the flood control committee of the house. It is a bill to earmark $600,000,000 of the money for flood projects in all parts of the country, and under it about 400 projects which have been recommended by army engineers would be started.

The committee was told the list of projects called for expenditure of approximately $100,000,000 in the lower Mississippi river valley and that expenditure of $181,000,000 would "prevent the devastating floods" in that area.

BY A vote of 202 to 191, the house voted to substitute the Patman currency expansion bill for payment of the soldiers' bonus for the "sound money" plan of Representative Vinson. A boisterous house thus defied President Roosevelt's warning that he will veto immediate payment of the adjusted compensation certificates. The administration is counting on the senate sustaining the veto.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT is looking ahead to 1936. Authoritative word has reached the Capitol that he wants all controversial administration legislation cleared away at this session, so that congress can meet for a short and harmonious session prior to the 1936 Presidential campaign. Besides the relief bill, Mr. Roosevelt is said to be specially anxious to have congress pass his social security program; utility holding company legislation; a bill continuing NRA for two years; transportation regulation co-ordination; banking legislation; ship subsidy and increase in the capital of the Home Owners Loan corporation. If this can be cleared from the calendar, it may prevent any serious party squabbles that might interfere with plans to bring about Roosevelt's re-election. The White House is much concerned over rumors that congress may scrap a good part of the administration's controversial legislation.

SPRING arrived in the West with a stifling dust storm which shrouded the country from eastern New Mexico to the Great Lakes. Powdered soil whipped up from the drouth-scourged prairies hid the sun, and beat relentlessly upon the senses. A dozen deaths were reported, due to suffocations, dust-induced pneumonia and traffic accidents. Freight trains were rolled to sidings, and passenger trains crept along on slow orders. Schools were closed in a number of communities in western states. Wheat prices jumped from 2 to 3¼ cents a bushel as winds cut into the dry Southwest, and Governor Landon of Kansas appealed to President Roosevelt for aid.

THE government is ready to sell gold to foreign nations that can offer an attractive proposition, Secretary Morgenthau announces. Recent sales to the Bank of Mexico and to Guatemala, Morgenthau points out, have cleared the way to similar negotiations with other countries, although he emphasized that no other transactions are being considered at this time. No conditions were attached to the transactions already consummated. In the dealings with Mexico virtually all her silver sales have been made to this country.

"We've got all the gold we can possibly use," Morgenthau added, indicating that the government would make no further undue efforts to accumulate the metal.

WITH considerable ceremony the Soviet government transferred to Japan full ownership of the Chinese Eastern railway and thus ceased to be an opposing factor in the Japanese occupation of Manchuria. In the official residence of Foreign Minister Koki Hirota in Tokyo the sale agreement and general protocol were signed and the bargain was clinched by the payment by Japan of 23,333,000 yen to the Soviet ambassador.

MUSSOLINI'S answer to the latest note on the Abyssinian situation postpones approval of the proposal that differences be decided by an international commission on conciliations "at least until the futility of direct negotiations has been proved." Il Duce made a counter-proposal suggesting that the Italian minister to Abyssinia and the Ethiopian foreign minister get together for a series of personal conferences; go over all the data, and attempt to settle the dispute without the necessity of conciliation under the direction of the League of Nations. Direct negotiations are said to have the approval of both the French and British.

Premier Mussolini

CLARENCE DARROW, foe of NRA, and author of the famous report which attacked NRA more than a year ago, assailed the administration's economic theories, including the national recovery act, in his testimony before the senate finance committee. The famous lawyer whose sharp speech and fiery courtroom tactics have made him famous, denounced NRA as playing into the hands of big business to the destruction of the "little fellow." He argued that NRA attacked the problem from the wrong angle and that the real trouble lay in faulty distribution, thus assailing the theory of scarcity. Darrow swept aside statements that NRA had helped organized labor, reduced unemployment and abolished child labor, with an assertion that it would have happened anyway. "The panic put an end to child labor," he said. "There wasn't any room for it while fathers and mothers were out of work."

The suffering due to continued concentration of wealth would have gone on anyhow, he said, but added that NRA accelerated it.

"I am not an optimist," he added. "I may be an idiot, but not a cheerful idiot."

THE federal tree planting project will get under way in North Dakota on April 15. The project has already been started in other states, but the major development of the program will be centered in North Dakota this year. The state has been assigned a quota of 600,000 trees for a belt 35 miles long. This is only a part of the operations which envisage a 100-mile wide belt of trees extending from near the Canadmn border to the Gulf of Mexico. The work started March 1 in Texas and Oklahoma, and March 15 in Kansas. Nebraska and South Dakoto projects will be started at the same time as that in North Dakota.

Let Our Motto Be GOOD HEALTH
BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD
Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

SEVERAL COMMON-SENSE RULES OF HEALTH

What can we do to give people common sense rules of health so that they can help themselves to keep well? That is a question public health officials are asking themselves all the time. In the research laboratory of the University of Illinois we are seeking constantly to find the simplest means for accomplishing this end.

For instance, we have been carrying on a study of the skin for quite a number of years.

We find that clean healthy skin disinfects itself rapidly. Dirty skin does not do this and hence dirty hands are dangerous hands.

Germs can rest on top of the dirt on soiled, unclean skin, just as easily as they can on dirty cloth or on sticky doorknobs, telephone mouthpieces and receivers. We also find that washing the hands with good soap and warm water removes most of the germs along with the dirt, and then the clean skin can kill most of the remaining germs within the space of ten minutes, and all of them within the space of thirty minutes.

If the skin is broken or otherwise injured, however, it will not disinfect itself at the broken or injured place. Hence a broken skin surface will carry alive any germs put on it.

We have also made a study of the lips, and we have found that where the moistened membrane of the mouth and the skin meet, bacteria do not die so quickly as they do on other parts of the skin, but will live from two to three hours. This discovery is of special significance in the spread of lung and throat germs. When a person with tuberculosis coughs, the germs live on the lips for at least two hours afterward. This means that when a tuberculosis person puts his fingers or a cup to the lips any time during a two or three-hour period after a coughing spell, the fingers or the cup will get a dose of germs. We can thus see that disinfecting and burning the sputum are not the only preventives necessary against the spreading of tuberculosis germs.

In our study of common colds, we have found that persons susceptible to colds—those who catch colds easily, are different from the persons who seldom have head colds. The difference can be stated briefly as follows: By using a special apparatus, we have been able to measure the temperature of the nose, throat, forehead, cheek and arm all at the same time. Now, when a normally head cold-resistant person dips his foot into cold water, or puts a cold towel on his back or his chest, the skin temperature on the face and arm lowers immediately, and the temperature of the lining membrane of the nose lowers likewise to the same degree. But, within ten seconds the nose temperature starts rising, and it keeps on rising until it is higher than normal temperature, or is at fever heat, as we say. The skin temperature is much more sluggish, but gradually it starts to rise, too. And it is not until it is back to normal that the nose temperature comes down to normal. To repeat, the normal reaction of a person who does not catch cold easily is—skin and nose temperatures drop at the same time for the first ten seconds, then nose temperature quickly rises to above normal temperature and stays that way until skin temperature has come back to normal, when both become equal again.

Now, when the same experiment is performed on a person very susceptible to colds or on one who has a history of four or five colds a year, we find that while the nose temperature makes the same sudden drop as the skin temperature does, it does not quickly rise to above normal, as it does in the healthy person. On the contrary, it stays down as long as the skin temperature, or even longer, and sometimes it goes lower than the skin temperature, and it may stay that way for half an hour or longer. In other words, the cold-susceptible people have a different heat regulatory system for the nose and throat than the cold-resistant people have. And when the temperature of the nose stays down, then the nose becomes congested, there is sneezing and running of the nose and the membrane of the nose swells.

Dr. Irwin Spiesman and other workers on our staff have found that the only way to make people with frequent head colds less susceptible to colds, is by first training their skin temperature regulatory system to react as it does in cold-resistant people. This is done by taking hot baths in the morning, and by walking in the open air at least one hour a day.

Then the diet should be watched to see that it contains plenty of fresh fruits and green vegetables and lean meat. Sweets and pastry should be avoided, and corn bread used in preference to wheat bread.

Doctor Spiesman has learned also that cold-susceptible persons are inclined to worry. He asks them: "Did worrying about a thing ever help?" It's a question that makes one think.

FODDER PAPER FOUND TO BE TOO COSTLY

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Prospects of using waste cornstalks for manufacture of paper on a commercial scale in the near future were dashed by the national bureau of standards.

The bureau reported recent studies showed satisfactory paper could be made from cornstalks, but difficulties raised the costs so high it was estimated the stalks could not compete successfully with woood, even if wood were double the price. One exception was listed. Competing conditions would be changed if profitable uses could be developed for by-products or parts of the stalk not used for paper making.

"This work was undertaken," the bureau said, "to find just what the possibilities are for converting a part of this large annual farm waste into paper.

"The bureau's technicians were able to make clean, white writing paper from cornstalks despite serious difficulties presented by the structural characteristics of the plant and by the excessive amounts of dirt always clinging to field-gathered stalks. When costs are considered, however, it does not appear that cornstalks can compete successfully with wood as a raw material for paper under present conditions."

The bureau said special mechanical preparation of the stalks was found essential to successful pulping with chemicals, owing to structural peculiarities of the type of plant stem.

The hard outside part of the stem contains the bulk of the fibers of suitable length for paper and the most satisfactory results in pulping were obtained by using only this outside shell or cortex. The cortex was separated from the pith and shredded by special mechanical processes.

gricultural Imports Are Small, Says Oberhauser

ports off competetive agricul- products into the United s during the the first eight ths off the current agricultural eting year from July through uary were equivalent to about nty-five percent of the average rt of those products during the years preceeding. Corn imports he eight months for which figwere available totaled six and half million bushels. Normal in America is around two and half billion bushels. The crop year was one and four tenths on bushels. A little arithmetic ws that the corn imports during past eight months have amounto only six tenths of one per of the reduction in production year.

sing similar figures we find the imports of oats totals htly more than nine million hels amounting to one and four ths percent of the reduction in put.

n the case off barley, wheat and the imports were slightly lar- . Taken as a whole imports o d grains and hay during the ht months amounted to two per- t of the estimated shortage of duction last year. It is a further t that much of the corn and eat imported from Argentina is the flinty type and is used largely commercial purposes and chicken d.

The six and one half million shels of corn imported for the 8 nths period beginning July first about two million more bushels n Hancock County produces in a rmal year.

YOUR CHILD AND THE SCHOOL

By Dr. ALLEN G. BYELAND

Director, Physical and Health Education, New Jersey State Department of Public Instruction

Playground Accidents

To be content with the old saying "accidents will happen" is to be old fashioned.

We have suffered and lost too long under that indifferent attitude. The modern idea is to do something about it. Not just talking to children, for that is out, along with scolding, preaching, and threatening. We have a guardianship to serve, and an important responsibility falling to school officials is to recognize every possible accident situation and to erect every safeguard available.

By no means does this mean curtailing the normal activities of children. Such action would be little short of criminal. It means, rather, that the facilities we provide for children's activities shall be as free of hazards as we can make them. Are there hazards at your school? That significant question introduces a new line of thought into this series. It is an inexhaustible subject, so more later.

How can children's spring play be made safe? Dr. Byeland will discuss this problem next week.

TWO PARTIES GIVEN IN HONOR OF NEWLYWEDS

Thursday evening, March 27th, was an evening long to be remembered by Mr. and Mrs. August Josten, when they were invited to the Aielt Riekens home at Belmond where about sixty-five relatives and friends had gathered to surprise them. Along with other entertainment a mock wedding was given, and games were played until a late hour when refreshments were served. Mr. and Mrs. Josten were presented with what they say was "a whole wagon load of fine gifts."

Last week Friday evening was the date for another big evening for Mr. and Mrs. Josten when they were called to the John Meinders home east off Klemme where about fifty neighbors and friends had gathered in their honor. Games were played until a late hour, when refreshments were served. Mr. and Mrs. Josten were presented with many and various useful gifts and their friends wished them a long and happy married life.

"DEACON SLIPS" WAS A BIG SUCCESS

"Deacon Slips," the play given in Liberty School Dist. No. 5 on Tuesday night proved to be a big success. Lester McMurray, in special bald-headed makeup, played the part off the "Deacon." Lloyd Ulrich, with dark hair and a heavy black mustache, impersonated the villain Aaron Stromer and Emil Blumer were very good on the stage. Jimmie Wade, as the comedian of the play, kept the house in a continuous uproar with his wisecracks. The three ladies, Mrs. McMurray, Mrs. Emil Blumer and Mrs. Walter Bredlow, were most natural and at home on the stage.

This school room is about 4 foot larger than the other school buildings of the township, giving ample room for a raised stage. The rear off the stage was enclosed with a cyclorama of unbleached muslin decorated with a cretone border, while the front curtain was percale. Good stage lighting was achieved by making a spot light from a gas lantern and a strip of bright tin.

Mr. Hrubes on the accordian and Mr. Panhoff on the guitar played some very snappy numbers between acts. Richard and Merlyn Ulrich, sons of Lloyd Ulrich, entertained with a group of cowboy songs. The boys have wonderful natural talent.

Planks and folding chairs provided seating for about a hundred of the audience. Ice cream, pie, sandwiches and coffee were sold in the basement after the program.

This School District is to be complimented on the abundance off good talent within its borders. The teacher, Miss Lola Goll, announced the different numbers of the program and handled the large crowd in an able and tactful manner Much credit is due Miss Goll for the success off the evening's entertainment.

WANT AN EARLY GARDEN? HERE ARE TIPS TO HELP YOU

To get quick returns on early vegetables, A .T. Erwin, chief of the Vegetable Crops sub-section at Iowa State College, offers the following suggestions.

1. Use a sandy loam for early planting, and if possible, select a sloping tract of ground. Good drainage is important in the success of early vegetables as it allows the soil to warm up more quickly during wet weather.

2. Onion sets produce one off the earliest crops in early spring. They grow at a low temperature and are ready for consumption within a few weeks.

3. Make sure that you are planting loose-leaf lettuce and not head lettuce if you desire an early green food.

4. Peas will be ready for the table within a short time after planting if you obtain the right seed. The smooth, round pea is the early variety; the wrinkled one is late.

5. Rhubarb can be hurried along for early use by putting a closed frame around the plant and covering it with a piece of hotbed glass.

CHURCH LOYALTY CRUSADE MOVES ON

"Like a mighty army, moves the Church of God." A prominent pastor said this week that never during the past quarter of a century has there been greater church loyalty in Iowa than today. This fact is born out when we learn that over 500 churches in Iowa affiliated with the united church loyalty crusade are having more people in church, Sunday school, young people's societies than they have had for years. A greater church consciousness is manifested. The Church is a unique institution, differing from every other organization and appealing to the very best in us.

Next Sunday is Young People's Day in the local Methodist church. A special sermon and anthem for Sunday School scholars and young people at the 10 o'clock worship hour. Will we have the center section of the church filled with young people? Young people show your colors next Sunday morning. No adult or parent should miss that service. It will be the greatest service thus for during the crusade. Last Sunday showed that a few more country folk were present at church than town people.

MANY OUT-OF-TOWN FRIENDS AND RELATIVES ATTENDED LUPPO BLANK FUNERAL

One of the distinctive features of the Wellemeyer Funeral Service is the preparation of a "Memorial Service Record." This booklet contains all information concerning the funeral and is presented to the bereaved family. From such a booklet the Klemme Times has gleamed the following information in connection with the burial of Luppe Blank whose funeral occurred Friday of last week.

In addition to the usual service at the home the Rev. Calvin Grossheusch read two German hymns, which were favorites of the deceased, "Harre Meine Seele," and "Was Gott Tut, Das Ist Wohlgetan."

At the church Rev. Grosshuesch spoke in the German language using for his text these words: "Blessed are they who mourn, for they shall be comforted." A quartette consisting of Edwin Thieman, Mrs. A. H Dulmes, Mrs. W. L. Thada and Harvey Barz sang two numbers, "Rock of Ages" and "Going Down the Valley."

The Rev. Otto Poppin, pastor of the Palsville Reformed church, assisted with the reading of the ritual at the grave.

Mr. Blank was carried to his final resting place by fellow directors of the Klemme Creamery and the Farmers Elevator, with whom he had worked these many years. They were Wm. H. Greiman, John Bock, W. G. Lenz, Herman Stromer Otto Pringnitz and C. J. Wille.

Among the out off town relatives and friends who attended the funeral were: Mrs. Kate Mauss, John Mauss, Mr. and Mrs. Asmaus, of Rake, Iowa; Mrs. T. R. Auxiliary Meeting

The Klemme Auxiliary will meet Thursday evening at the R. N. A. room, with Mrs. Jacobs as hostess.

ONLY COOL MAY AND JUNE CAN CHECK INSECT THREAT

All Iowa may expect a heavy infestation of insect pests this summer and fall if May and June are unusually hot and dry, asserts Dr. Carl J. Drake, state entomologist, located at Iowa State College. Only cool, damp weather during the months will curb the destructive activities of the chinch bug, grasshopper and armyworm in more than three-fourths off the state during the growing season.

These three pests are the ones most likely to cause heavy damage. Chinch bugs increased so much last year that they have spread into 76 counties. Eastern Iowa is most heavily infested. Two-inch paper barriers will be discussed for control at a conference of entomologists from, Iowa, Illinois and Missouri to be held soon. Seven million gallons of creosote have been requested.

Grasshoppers are most prevalent in the two tiers of counties along the western border of the state. It is estimated that between 500 and 1,000 tons poison bran mash will be required to combat them. Farmers should watch their small grain fields carefully for signs of the armyworm since many hibernate in the grass crop areas last fall. Armyworm become active just after sundown.

The possibility of extensive damage from these three insects is unusually serious this year and is likely to be the heaviest in the history of agriculture. Iowa and Illinois appear to be most heavily infested.

TO EXAMINE CONFIRMATION CLASS SUNDAY

A class of twelve have completed a three years catechism and Bible course at the Reformed Church. The class will be examined before the congregation at the regular service next Sunday morning.

The members of the class are Velma Kaduce, Avis Barz, Eloise Etchen. Doris Barz, Elaine Buntenbach, Gladys Griffen, Stella Barz, Verner Lau. Paul Schuldt. Raymond Wille, Harold Christian, Earl Neuhring.

Confirmation will take place on Good Friday, April 19th.

SPRAY SERVICE OFFERED TO LOCAL FRUIT GROWERS

During the coming season. the Hancock County Farm Bureau will send notices regarding all orchard sprays to any fruit grower in the county.

S. J. Oberhauser, county agent, has just completed arrangements with the Extension Service of Iowa State College whereby the horticulturists will cooperate with him in supplying the necessary information so fruit growers may know the most effective time to apply each necessary spray. Anyone desiring this service should notify the county agents office at Garner and he will place their name on the mailing list for this service.

In explaining this service, Mr. Oberhauser says that the various diseases and insects affecting fruit vary in their development and seriousness from year to year. By this means the farmers will be able to keep in touch with the seasonal development of these pests and thru the spray service report their findings to the growers.

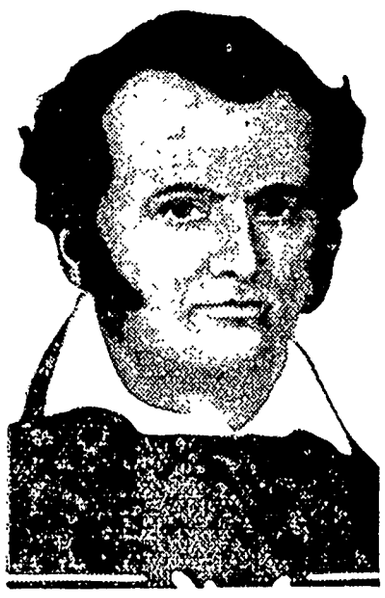
Famous, and Forgotten

PART I
By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THEY'RE famous—and forgotten!

Their names have become common words—nouns, verbs, adjectives and parts of familiar phrases—words used in everyday speech by thousands of people who would find it very difficult to give you any definite information about the man or woman whose name and fame they are thus helping to perpetuate.

If you doubt that statement, test your own knowledge on the list of words which appear at the top of this article. See how many of them you can identify in terms of the nationality of the man or woman from whose name the word is derived, approximately when he or she lived, or under what circumstances this person's name came to be used thus.



JAMES BOWIE

No doubt, in most cases you know, or can make a pretty good guess, as to the nationality of the man or woman and the period of history to which they belong. But in many cases, the circumstances under which their names were applied to some object, action or quality is a matter of dispute and there is more than one reason assigned for such application. So your guess may be as good as anyone's.

Back in 1926 when word came from Greenville, Ohio, that Mrs. Frank E. Butler had died there at the age of sixty, the news meant little, perhaps, to the average reader. But it was sad news to a generation of American boys, now grown up, who could remember back to the days when Annie Oakley was not only "Little Sure Shot" in Buffalo Bill's Wild West show but also the girl of their dreams and "America's Sweetheart" long before Mary Pickford ever bore that title. For Mrs. Frank Butler, living in retirement far from the scenes of her triumphs on two continents as the greatest markswoman the world has ever known, was Annie Oakley.

News of her death called forth many reminiscences of those days and it also revived a discussion as to why free tickets are called "Annie Oakley's." One version is that before her daily performance with the Wild West show Annie Oakley was accustomed to toss a pack of cards into the air and shoot at them. Anyone who secured one of the cards with a bullet hole in it was given a free admission to the show. Another version is that each time a season pass to a theater was used, it was punched by the ticket-taker. By the end of the season the pass would be so full of holes that it "looked as though Annie Oakley had been shooting at it." There may be other versions as well. If so, take your pick! One is as good as another but the fact remains that in the show business all passes or free tickets are called Annie Oakleys and they perpetuate the name not only of a remarkable sharpshooter but one of the finest women who ever lived.

Not so admirable, perhaps, but still deserving of remembrance was the woman whose name is perpetuated in the familiar term for the vehicle used to take prisoners to a police station. She was Maria Lee, a giant negress who kept a sailors' boarding house in Boston back in Colonial days and who was of great assistance to the authorities in keeping the peace. Whenever an unusually obstreperous person was to be taken to the station house, it became a common occurrence to "send for Black Maria" and gradually that expression became a synonym for "call the wagon" and the wagon itself became a "Black Maria."

Although Amelia Jenks Bloomer (1818-94) didn't design the article of feminine attire which bears her name, it was her advocacy of reform in the clothing of her sex which attached her name to it. She advocated it first through the columns of the Seneca Falls (N. Y.) Courier, a weekly newspaper published by her husband, Dexter C. Bloomer, and a little later in the Lily, a periodical which she launched in 1849 in the interests of women's rights and temperance. The woman who did design it was Mrs. Elizabeth Smith Miller, a daughter of Gerrit Smith of New York, famous reformer and Abolitionist, so it would have been more appropriate if the Turkish pantaloons worn by Mrs. Miller first, then by Mrs. Bloomer and by Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Lucy Stone and Dr. Mary Walker, had been called "millers" instead of "bloomers." But "Bloomers" they became in those days and "bloomers" (notice they are no longer spelled with a capital

ANNIE OAKLEY

B as they were then) they are today although the garments themselves have changed somewhat in the course of 80 years.

Although the pompadour is a style of arranging the hair that was more popular among women two or three decades ago than it is now, it is still a familiar word and it perpetuates the name of Jeanne Antoinette Poisson, Marquise de Pompadour (1721-64), a charming Parisienne who was the mistress of King Louis XV of France and who made that style of hairdressing popular. Similarly, another aid to feminine charm—but this time a bit of jewelry, the lavalliere—recalls the name of the "girl friend" of another French Louie. She was Francoise Louise de Labaume Le Blanc, Duchesse de La Valliere (1044-1710), mistress of Louis XIV, the "Grand Monarch."

And now that the rule of "ladies first" has been observed, partially, at least, attention may be turned to the men whose names have become nouns, verbs, etc. Taking them in alphabetical order, the word ampere was given to the unit of measurement of the strength of an electrical current in honor of Andre Marie Ampere (1775-1836), the French mathematician and physicist whose experiments resulted in the establishment of that unit.

Bessemer steel honors Sir Henry Bessemer (1813-98), the English metallurgist and inventor, whose new steel manufacturing process, introduced in 1856, revolutionized the industry throughout the world.

When you go into a shoe store and express a preference for bluchers, you are perpetuating the memory of Gebhard Leberecht von Blucher (1742-1819), the Prussian field marshal who aided in the overthrow of Napoleon at Waterloo and in whose honor the Order of the Iron Cross was established in Germany.

Now that the Eighteenth amendment has been repealed there are few places in the United States which are bone-dry territory and even there it's probable that one can get booze. Why "bone-dry" and "booze"? According to one story, John Bone was sheriff of Chippewa county, Michigan, in the early days of that state and because of his strict enforcement of the state liquor laws, the next anti-liquor bill passed by the legislature was called the Bone dry bill. Back in the early days of the republic, E. G. Booz, who lived in Woodbury, N. J., manufactured Old Cabin whiskey which he sold in bottles shaped like log cabins. Because of the superior quality of his product, people soon began asking for it by the name of its maker—Booz. Eventually, the capital B was dropped and an e added to the end of the word and that's how "booze" started.

If you're puritanical by nature and want to Bowdlerize reading matter of any sort you are emulating the example of Thomas Bowdler (1754-1825), an Englishman, who in 1810 brought out a "Family Shakespeare" with all the naughty Elizabethan words left out.

The bowie-knife, that fearsome weapon without which a dime novel hero would have been shamefully undressed, perpetuates the memory of James Bowie (1790-1836), the Texas patriot who perished nobly at the Alamo. There is some doubt as to whether or not he invented the knife but it's certain that he was a masterly exponent of its use.

When Capt. Charles Cunningham Boycott (1832-97), manager of the estate of Lord Erne in Connemara, Ireland, adopted harsh methods of collecting rents from the lord's tenants he little realized that their methods of retaliation upon him in the fall of 1880 would add a new word to the English language and that the word would be his name. But it did and that's why a commercial or social taboo is a "boycott" to this day.

Bright's disease is named for Richard Bright (1789-1858) an English doctor who was physician-extraordinary to Queen Victoria and the man who in 1827 issued the first authoritative statement in regard to the disease which is also known as general dropsy.

Steve Brodie leaped from the Brooklyn bridge into the East river and into fame at the same time in 1886 and until his death in 1901 he kept on doing spectacular jumps from high places. That's why jumping or falling is "doing a Brodie" in the American slanguage.

That same slanguage includes such expressions as "That's the bunk!" or "Don't give me any of your bunkum!" Thereby is perpetuated in a curious way the name of Edward Buncombe, a colonel in the Continental army, who was wounded at the battle of Germantown in 1777 and who died as a prisoner of war in Philadelphia the following year. In 1791 Buncombe county in North Carolina was created and named for this Revolutionary hero but he might have been forgotten if it hadn't been for Felix Walker, a naive old mountaineer, who was elected to congress from a western North Carolina district which included Buncombe county. During the debate on the Missouri Compromise in 1820 when the house was ready for a vote, Walker insisted upon making a speech. Several members gathered around him and begged him to wait until the important business of voting on the compromise was ended. But he persisted, declaring that his constituents expected him to say something on the subject and he was bound to "make a speech for Buncombe." Thus the word came to mean any claptrap talk or an insincere political speech.

The Bunsen burner, used in all chemical laboratories, was named for George Wilhelm Bunsen (1811-99), a German chemist who invented it.

James Thomas Bridenell, seventh earl of Cardigan, who led the famous "Charge of the Light Brigade," also gave us the knitted woolen jacket which bears his name—a cardigan.

Louis Jacques Daguerre (1789-1851), a French scientist, perfected his process of making "sun pictures" in 1834 and that's why daguerreotypes show us how our grandfathers and grandmothers looked.

For speed in getting from here to there and back again we can thank Rudolph Diesel (1858-1913), a German scientist who was born in Paris, and his Diesel engine.

Back in the reign of Henry VII of England a bailiff named John Dun was famous for his ability to collect rents, duties and other debts. That's why we dun people for what they owe us.

If we have to take stringent methods to galvanize them into action we help perpetuate the memory of Luigi Galvani (1737-98), an Italian physiologist and anatomist, who discovered in 1791 what an electrical shock applied to the nerves in a dead frog's legs would make the frog do.

Few people remember perhaps that Elbridge Gerry (1744-1814) was a signer of the Declaration of Independence, a vice president of the United States and a governor of Massachusetts but they do know that a gerrymander is the name for arranging political districts in such a manner that one party can control them. Here's why: In 1811 the Democrats of Massachusetts elected Gerry governor and also obtained a majority in both houses of the legislature. Then they put through a law rearranging the state senatorial districts without regard for geographical location or convenience of the voters, the main idea being to get enough voters of their kind in each district so as to assure their continued success at the polls. Despite widespread criticism, Governor Gerry signed the bill. The arrangement of the towns in Essex county was so absurd that the editor of the Boston Sentinel colored them on a map so as to bring out to the fullest extent the ridiculousness of the arrangement. One day Gilbert Stuart, the great artist, was in the Sentinel office and noticing that the colored map resembled a strange animal, took pencil and added a head, claw, wings and tail. Turning to the editor he said: "How will that do for a salamander?" "Salamander nothing!" shouted the editor. "It's a Gerrymander!" thereby adding a word to our political lexicon which survives to this day.

"Get your gat!" is a succinct Americanism for "Arm yourself!" and that's because an American, Richard Harding Gatling of North Carolina (1818-1903) patented a small rapid-firing cannon in 1861 just in time to be useful durihg the Civil war and to be a terrible engine of death until along came a more terrible one—the machine gun.

If you're going to take a trip, you may or may not pack up a Gladstone. Anyway, it's a piece of luggage named in honor of the famous English statesman, William E. Gladstone (1809-98).

Busy Dictators
Hitler, Peace Angel
Lie Test for Hauptmann?
All Heard the Moans.

Europe's dictators borrow ideas from each other. Mussolini, perhaps unconsciously, copied Rienzi, who ended violently. Hitler saw how well Mussolini's idea worked and adopted it. Dolfuss tried it in Vienna, ended badly.

Arthur Brisbane

Kemal Pasha has made a success of it thus far in Turkey, throwing sultans overboard, Mohammed, the fez, veils for women also.

Kemal says, "If Hitler can defy the league and kick over the Versailles treaty, so can I." He will fortify the Dardanelles, in spite of the treaty that created a neutral zone adjoining the narrow water passage that separates Europe from Asia, at Constantinople.

Hitler, turning with a rapidity that would startle any worm, now declares himself guardian angel of Europe, offering to start a world peace guaranteed to last 20 years. That would depend on Japan and Russia.

There is a scientific test for lying. Try as he may to control himself, a man lying undergoes physical and psychological changes that a certain scientific apparatus reproduces in a "graph" when the lying begins.

Mrs. Hauptmann, her husband sentenced to death for kidnaping the Lindbergh baby, suggests that her husband be subjected to the "lie test," adding, "he would be freed instantly."

He could not be "freed instantly" because the law does not yet recognize the "lie test" as conclusive, but the experiment would be interesting. The framing of questions, which should be put in fewest possible words and as startlingly as possible, would be important.

New Jersey's Attorney General Wilentz, who brought about the conviction, would be the man to frame the questions.

Consider the principal of the Schaff Junior High school at Parma, Ohio. That principal, having decided to beat five boys caught smoking in the school building, using his microphone, ordered all classes and all noise stopped throughout the school while the five boys were "paddled" near the microphone for the whole school to hear.

The story goes, "Startled students next heard the 'Whack! Whack!' of the paddles and the moans of the culprits."

A girl baby two weeks old, smiling, pretty, dressed in pink and white, found abandoned in a New York hallway, was taken to the Foundling hospital, a sort of "pound" for lost children.

If a good-looking chow, Boston bull or Irish wolfhound two weeks old had been found, there would be a thousand only too glad to take and care for it. Our alleged cousins the chimpanzees could hardly believe that.

There are miracles of various kinds, even in healing leprosy. It can be done, as the Bible shows, by supernatural power. It can be done by science. Jacintho Moura, Portuguese chemist, in Rio de Janeiro, smashed a finger, and while suffering acute pain accidentally dipped the finger in a liquid vegetable extract that he was preparing. This vegetable liquid, obtained from a wild Brazilian plant, mixed with chalmoogra oil, according to Dr. Fernando Terra, director of the Rio de Janeiro hospital, has already cured 17 lepers.

Some accidents are valuable. The injured finger showed the way to an important cure.

At Kovno, Lithuania, four Nazis are sentenced to death on the gallows for plotting to separate Memel from Lithuania. Mr. Hitler, deeply grieved by the fate of four Nazis, is said to have protested to Sir John Simon, although it is not clear what that Britisher could do about it. The opinions of two ladies whose heads were recently chopped off, by order of Chancellor Hitler, would be interesting, but will never be known. Once the head is chopped expression of opinion ceases.

Mussolini says "Italy offers the world a spectacle of calm," and promptly raises his army to 660,000 men, promising to make it 2,000,000. He says, "Let it be clear that our desire for peace is backed by several million bayonets." That is calm, for Mussolini.

Congressman Patman, Texas Democrat, puts the bonus matter in few words. He says those that insist on issuing interest-bearing bonds are managing a scheme to pay "two billions to coupon clippers and two billions to veterans."

Why make taxpayers pay the two billions to "bond clippers" when it is not necessary?

An Interesting State.

It would be the only where pineapple is one of the pal products; the only state with tive volcano; the only state with n, distinctive native race of peo- nd the only state inaccessible by ad or motor car. It boasts some e most beautiful resorts in the world; and it has a leper colony. overnment and customs are as ican as a model-T Ford; and more a third of its population is of ese descent. islands, which stretch out for 400 miles, 2,100 miles southwest n Francisco, were discovered in by a sailor named Juan Gaetano. were promptly forgotten, but rediscovered by Capt. James Cook 78.

Hawaiian islands first became d under one strong, central gov- ent in 1795, when the native King hameha conquered Maui and John Jacob Astor visited the ds in the interest of trade in 1811, France, England and the United s traded considerably with the e of the islands during the follow- years. The predominating influ- since that time has always been ican.

It was finally ad- by McKinley in 1898, and in territorial government was set ith Dole as governor. The pres- nce is Joseph B. Poindexter, nted by the President.

The islands have little mineral wealth, so the principal industry is agriculture. The sugar crop is annually worth more than $75,000,000 and the pineapples $35,000,000.

Civilization has developed to a high degree. Steam railroads run on regular schedules on all the eight islands. There are street cars in Honolulu. Schools are excellent; in fact, it was in Hawaiian schools that early California settlers sent their children to be educated. Education is compulsory. The University of Hawaii compares with many on the mainland.

Hawaii and Texas are the only parts of the United States that have come into the Union by annexation. No purchase or conquest was involved.

Hawaii's people are of the feeling today that their territory has grown to a point which justifies its statehood; Americans in the states are perhaps inclined to feel the islands so remote from them that they care little. Yet a woman has flown from Hawaii to California in only a few hours; there is even now regular air mail service between the states and the islands.

Hawaiians point out that their population is double that of Texas when Texas entered the Union; the states are apt to retort that some two-thirds of Hawaii's population is not of the white race, that one-third of it is of Japanese descent.

Since annexation Hawaii has paid approximately $175,000,000 into the federal treasury in taxes, customs receipts, and so on, an average of $5,000,000 a year. For several years Hawaii has paid more than any one of 16 states, including Oregon and Alabama, which have three and seven times its population, respectively.

Hawaii's trade relations with the mainland have increased mightily since she became a territory. From quite modest beginnings the sum total of imports and exports rose to $207,000,000 in 1928; they maintained nearly as high a level even after the crash—in 1932 they totaled $192,000,000.

Hawaii has been but little affected by the depression. It is one of the few places on earth where a man who wants work can get it overnight.

Honolulu Is American.

Honolulu, the capital city, is truly American. It has compulsory education, like all the islands, and it has more endowed institutions than any other city of its size in the United States. It has no billboards, and is un-American in that way; it preferred to keep its roadsides beautiful instead of commercial.

Hawaiians are interested in their government. The average vote in an average election is approximately 80 per cent of the total registration, a record for the United States. The islands are governed by a senate of 15 members elected for four-year terms and a house of representatives of 30 members, elected for two years. The governor serves a four-year term.

For efficiency Honolulu city and county were combined under one civil government in 1909. The city proper is about the size of Albany, N. Y., Long Beach, Calif., or Norfolk, Va., but its government includes an area 2,260 miles long, stretching from Midway island to Palmyra island.

Centralization has been the trend of Hawaiian government all along. In the present session of the territorial legislature serious consideration is being given the proposal for consolidation of the two legislative houses.

Hawaiians are proud of their climate; it is said that no temperature has ever been recorded below 56 or about 88 in Honolulu. Even prouder are the Hawaiians of their patriotism. During the World war, Hawaii exceeded its quota on every Liberty and Victory loan. Enlistments were so heavy that the territory was exempted from the first draft.

Delay in realizing the dream of statehood was of little consequence to Hawaiians until the Jones-Costigan bill made them feel that they were being subjected to the whim and will of congress. Champions of statehood see the increasing of the Cuban sugar quota at Hawaii's expense much as a Milwaukeean might see a similar law restricting enormously the production of cheese in Wisconsin so that American purchases of Holland cheese could be increased. Hawaii wants statehood for the protection of her agricultural interests, in which hundreds of millions of dollars are invested.

Race Problem Misunderstood.

Hawaiian citizens claim that mainlanders misunderstand her problem of races. Hawaii, they say, is not, as many persons in continental United States believe, over-run with alien orientals who are nonassimilable into western culture and modes of thought, and who would, in the event of statehood, control the politics and government through a tendency to vote according to racial blocs.

There is fear sometimes expressed that in the event of war, the Americans of alien descent in Hawaii would constitute an anti-American group in an American community. Logically, the Hawaiians claim, this criticism would hold as true of Hawaii the territory as of Hawaii the state. There are more persons of Japanese descent than any other; Americans and other whites, Hawaiians and part-Hawaiians are about equal to each other in number. There is also a large number of Filipinos.

Delegate King answered the racial argument in a recent address as follows:

"To those who are concerned about our racial set-up, let me say that no unprejudiced person doubts for a moment the loyalty of our citizens of whatever ancestry, any more than one would doubt those in many communities on the mainland that have as great a diversity of racial strains. In a population of over 380,000 people, perhaps a third are aliens, ineligible to citizenship. While an important element industrially, this group does not participate in governmental affairs. The citizen group, about two-thirds of the population, comprises in round numbers 50,000 Hawaiians and part Hawaiians, nearly as large a group of Anglo-Saxons, and a somewhat smaller number of Latins, in all about 150,000 of Caucasian and Polynesian peoples whose Americanism is above question; and about 120,000 citizens of Chinese and Japanese ancestry, concerning whose loyalty we of Hawaii have no doubt. The Chinese group came originally to Hawaii nearly 60 years ago. Its descendants are now completely identified with the country of their birth. The more numerous and more recent citizens of Japanese ancestry, many of them still children, and all of them necessarily Hawaiian-born to be able to qualify as citizens, are showing every indication of their desire to be Americans in the fullest sense, and to one who has lived among them and observed their progress in this ambition, there can be no doubt as to their sincerity nor their capacity for citizenship."

As to the argument that citizens of alien ancestry will tend to form a racial bloc and so dominate island politics, Hawaiian proponents of statehood will retort by referring you to the record. And here are two instances they are sure to recall:

First, the 1930 campaign, when an American of Japanese ancestry was elected outright at the primary to the board of supervisors of the island of Kauai. At that time the citizens of Japanese extraction were in the minority on Kauai and the successful candidate was elected by the ballots of all races. Two years later when for the first time Americans of Japanese ancestry led all groups in racial registrations, the same man went down to defeat.

Second, a campaign on the island of Maui in the same year. Two citizens of Japanese ancestry ran for the board of supervisors. One was elected outright at the primary; the other was not even nominated.

Diet in the Welfare of Child

Physical Future Dependent on Food Elements in Early Years; Calcium and Phosphorus Both Highly Important for Bones and Teeth.

Good health! How fortunate we are if we are endowed with what is known as a good constitution, and how wise we are when we give our bodies the care which they deserve! The choice of a proper diet is very important in promotion of well being. While the choice of diet is important throughout life, it is essential in childhood. Children must add inches each year to the structure of their bodies, and at the same time must cover these bones with tissue.

The most important elements in the formation of good bones and teeth are calcium and phosphorus, which insure not only the growth of the body but also its strength. Children need twice as much calcium each day as do adults. They also must have a proportionately large amount of phosphorus. To make calcium and phosphorus function properly, we must have a liberal amount of vitamin D. In an article by Victor K. La Mer, professor of chemistry at Columbia university, the statement is made that this proportion is very important and that we can supply our diets best with calcium and phosphorus through the inclusion of a liberal amount of milk and leafy vegetables. Whole grains also are valuable on this account. For vitamin D we depend upon sunshine, cod-liver oil, or foods which have been reinforced with vitamin D. All of these work together in one interest.

If the money for food is limited we must take particular care that plenty of the foods which contain the three important items are included. Never scant your allowance for milk, part of which may be of the evaporated canned variety, if it is cheaper.

Oyster Souffle.

⅛ cup flour
1 cup milk
Pepper
½ teaspoon salt
Paprika
4 egg yolks
1 cup oysters
4 egg whites

Pour into greased casserole. Set in pan of hot water and bake about forty-five minutes in moderate oven (375 degrees F.), or until firm.

Fig Tapioca.

½ teaspoon salt
3½ cups boiling water
½ cup brown sugar
1 cup chopped figs
½ cup chopped nuts

Cook tapioca, salt and boiling water together until clear. Add sugar, figs and nuts. Cook five minutes, chill and serve with cream.

Cauliflower With Mushrooms.

1 head cauliflower
1 cup mushrooms
4 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
⅛ cup thin cream or milk
Salt and pepper

Boil cauliflower and then separate into sections. Slice the mushrooms and cook in about one cup of water until tender. Melt the butter, stir in flour and pour in the mushrooms and stock. Add cream or milk, stir, bring to the boiling point and season. Pour over cauliflower and serve.

Baked Tuna Fish.

2 cups canned tuna fish
4 tablespoons butter
4 tablespoons flour
2 cups strained tomatoes
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
¼ teaspoon sugar

Flake tuna fish apart. Melt butter, add flour and mix until free from lumps. Add tomato juice, salt, pepper and sugar. Bring slowly to the boiling point, stirring constantly until thick. Add tuna fish, pour into a buttered casserole and cover top with cheese. Bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) twenty to twenty-five minutes.

Still Seeking Solution of Evolution's Riddle

Historians of the future, according to Arnold J. Toynbee, historian addressing a meeting of scientists at London, in selecting the most outstanding event of the Twentieth century, will not designate the colossal political upheavals but rather "the tremendous impact of western culture upon the East." Deadly antagonisms have been stirred up among peoples of the Near East by western ideas, he explained, because they have been induced, especially by influences from western Europe, to substitute for their own institutions the principles of nationalism. Consequently, for them the "impact of western ideas has been especially disastrous."

Anthropologists still have many points of disagreement regarding man's origin, antiquity and development. Evolution's role in this development remains a riddle. Attempts were made to prove that comparisons of certain blood groupings from anthropoid apes "threw light on the origins and relationships of living human races"; but conclusions were that the attempts were failures.

COMPLETE LINES OF TRUCK TIRES FOR EVERY TRUCKING SERVICE AT LOWEST PRICES—GIVING LONG MILEAGE AND GREATEST ECONOMY

FIRESTONE pioneered the ship-by-truck movement in 1918, and ever since has consistently led in anticipating every requirement in the design and construction of truck and bus tires for every transportation condition. To accomplish this, Firestone has consistently followed the fundamental principle of its founder and active head, Harvey S. Firestone, "Always to find the way to build tires better than anyone else."

While there are many reasons why Firestone Tires are safer and more economical, there are two reasons that stand out above all others. One is Gum-Dipping; and the other is two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread.

By Gum-Dipping, every strand in every cord is soaked in liquid rubber, preventing friction—adding extra strength and long mileage. By having two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords placed between the tread and cord body, it is practical to use a tread with higher, more rugged shoulders and a deeper non-skid with flatter contour.

All this provides more rubber on the road, giving longer wear, greater traction and quicker stops. These two extra construction features are patented and used only in Firestone Tires. Take a forward step in maintaining schedules and reducing operating costs. Call on the Firestone Service Store or Firestone Service Dealer today.

Firestone GROUND GRIP TYPE — Super traction tire for unimproved roads.

Firestone OLDFIELD TYPE — The tire that taught thrift to millions.

Firestone SENTINEL TYPE — Volume production tire for light trucks.

Firestone HIGH SPEED TYPE — Greatest tire ever built for all-round service. Unequalled for high speeds and heavy hauling.

Early Warriors Made Use of Both Bow and Javelin

Early warriors not only employed the spear or javelin as a missile, but used bows and arrows with even more deadly effect. The bow was invented in prehistoric times, flint arrowheads found throughout Europe and Asia indicating an age of from 25,000 to 50,000 years or even greater for that weapon. First wars of which we have any record, writes John A. Menaugh in the Chicago Tribune, had opposing armies shooting at each other with bows and arrows, yet as old as the bow possibly can be, it is comparatively modern beside the first missile hurled by the beastlike cave man.

Ancient bows were of many patterns. The crossbow, a development of the ordinary bow, which came into general military use in continental Europe early in the Middle Ages, depended upon a single, double, or even triple bow of steel to propel its bolt; a missile shorter and heavier than the standard arrow. The bolt of the crossbow delivered a heavy blow at close range but lacked the carry of the arrow of the ordinary bow. It was the Hundred Years' war that brought the bow to its point of highest development. At Crecy, for instance, in 1346, the long bows of the English archers outranged and outshot the crossbows of the Italian mercenaries employed by the French king. The English bowyer could release a dozen arrows in the time required for a continental arbalester to set his crossbow by windlass or lever and discharge a single bolt.

Sea of Galilee Always Proves Great Attraction

A trip to the Sea of Galilee, or Lake Tiberias, as it is sometimes called, is ever interesting. High up on the west bank of the sea is Tiberias, the modern city occupying but a small portion of the site of ancient Tiberias, once the capital of Galilee, and after the destruction of Jerusalem the chief city of the Jewish nation.

Most ancient city of the world and one of the most important in the Bible is Damascus, a veritable paradise in the wilderness which has existed as a city without intermission for about 4,000 years. Because the River Abana bursts from the nearby mountains and distributes its waters over the plain, what would otherwise be a parched desert is converted to a luxuriance of fertile fields, orchards, gardens and vineyards. Above the white-terraced roofs rise tapering minarets and domes tipped with golden crescents. The private homes are the admiration of all. The apartments open into courts of remarkable beauty, where marble fountains play and lovely shrubs and climbing plants give freshness and fragrance. Damascus is closely connected with the life of St. Paul and the "Street Called Straight" is still to be seen, as well as the wall from which St. Paul was lowered at night in a basket.—Washington Post.

How Birds Get Food

Birds are adapted to securing various kinds of food, says a writer in the Missouri Farmer. Wading birds (like storks, herons, flamingoes, and pelicans) gobble up fish, frogs, and other water animals. Eagles, turkey-buzzards, hawks, and kites are flesh eaters. They have strong hooked-bills and sharp claws. They are fond of frogs, toads, snakes, insects, and small mammals like the rabbit, which they swoop down upon. Turkey-buzzards will feed upon animals that have been dead many days, and they usually smell like the decayed food which they eat. Most other birds feed upon insects, grain, weed-seeds, fruits, and such. Humming birds gather nectar from flowers. Owls seize mice and rats, while the swifts and swallows snatch insects from the air while in flight.

The Grooming of Ants

Naturalists who have been studying the habits of certain ants have discovered that the insects go through most careful operations of cleaning themselves. Each ant performs this operation, not for herself, but for another. She acts for the time as lady's maid. She stands by washing the face of her companion and then goes over the whole body. The actions of the ant who is being washed show the utmost satisfaction. She lies down with all her limbs stretched loosely out, she rolls over on her side, even on her back, a perfect picture of ease. The pleasure the little insect shows in being thus combed and washed is really an object lesson to many higher animals.—Montreal Herald.

The Guggenheim Foundation

The purpose of the Guggenheim Foundation for the Promotion of Aeronautics may be broadly defined as follows: To promote aeronautical education, both academic and general; to assist in the extension of fundamental aeronautical science; to assist in the development of commercial aircraft and aircraft equipment; to further the application of aircraft in business, industry and other economic and social activities of the nation.

Each Island Different

Each island in the Hawaiian group is different. The Isle of Hawaii has luxuriant jungles of tree ferns and volcanic wastes. There are quaint native villages and ruins of ancient temples. Maui island is dominated by Haleakala, old volcanic crater, while Kauai, the one to the north, is characterized by its rainbow-colored canyons and great cliffs facing the windward coast.

APRIL FOOL

"April Fool" was the sound ringing through the schoolhouse April 1, 1935. It seems that many students were the victims of the fooling but some people in the freshman and sophomore classes were quite so bold as to fool a teacher. One or two people started writing "April Fool" on their English papers instead of their regular lessons; it was soon passed along until many students pulled the joke. The teacher who was very good natured on this day, probably recalled her old school days and took it as a joke with the rest of us.—Dorothy Greiman.

SPRING SPORT

Some of the little folks thought they needed more exercise so they made an implement by nailing a short board across a longer one with which they can push a wheel ahead of them. We don't know who got a patent on this, but he must have got rich because everywhere you look someone is pushing a wheel to the tune of "C'long, c'long." Merle Schaeffer says he is going to buy a padlock for his spare wheel as he is afraid someone will be pushing it around with a stick.

DAVID COPPERFIELD

We are not advertising for the theatres ,but a movie that is coming to Garner soon that everyone should be interested in is "David Copperfield." Charles Dickens is famous for depicting unusual characters in his stories and such characters in "David Copperfield" are portrayed by some of today's best actors and actresses. The producers have kept the movie as nearly like the story as possible, and spent two two years collecting material for it. Another reason why it should be interesting to students is that many of the incidents were from Dicken's own life. "David Copperfield" was Dickens' favorite of all the books he wrote.—V. S.

GEOMETRY CONTEST

The sophomore geometry class had a contest between the boys and girls to test the speed and accuracy of both. The girls were quite puzzled at first because it seemed that they were beaten, but they just got up the old spirit and won. Hurrah for our side! We knew we could do it all the time.—D. G.

SHAMROCK BLARNEY

Practically all of the class contributed in some way to the "Sqealer" this week. Those whose names do not appear with any articles probably helped collect and copy the material. Some also wrote on the same topics as others and only one could be used.

The high school boys were very much pleased by the kind deed that was done Thursday forenoon. Mr. Heginger hauled about three loads of good sand on our soft ball diamond. The diamond surely needed it, for every time it rained, it meam that we would either go swimming or not play. Now when anybody wants to slide into home plate, he won't be afraid of tearing his pants; he might get a little sand in his shoes, but that sand won't hurt anybody.—Billie Lemke.

Thursday noon the high school got a treat by hearing Franklin Kluckhohn speak his declam piece "The Radio Fan" with which he had been successful in the series of state contests until he was defeated at Estherville. We hope next year he may take up the work again and we are sure he will make even further progress. Let's all hope so. —Wilma Swalve.

We, the "silly sophomores" as we are called, think we are picked on by the other classes and have a hard time in general. If anybody believes in miracles we surely do now; if anybody in high school ever was shocked, we certainly were Tuesday morning when Mr. Hunter said "No geometry"—Emily Paul.

Recent visitors in our high school included Floyd Klotzbach, Harold Jost, Doris and June Ludeke, Harry Christians Alice and Harry Cline, Georgia House, Max Barz and Henry Galbreth.—E. P.

5th and 6th Grade

This past six weeks the sixth grade has added one new member, Frederick Bell, and the fifth grade has added Lucille Hartbeck. We are happy to have both of them with us.

Zeola Johnson and Charles Book had birthdays on Wednesday. They entertained their classmates with candy.

Marjorie Lemke and Ellen Kilgore have been absent because of illness.

3rd and 4th Grades

Mrs. Gram was a visitor in our room this week.

Betty Jean Etchen had as her guest this week Rena Grell of Garner.

The third and fourth grades enjoyed the play given by the second grade Friday afternoon.

Milvern Barz Given Higher Rating In Music Contest

In the recent district music contest held at Britt, Milvern Barz entered the clarinet solo division. The Times reported that he was given a rating of "good." However, a check-up showed that he won an "excellent" rating, the highest given out in that division. Milvern will try to capture the "superior" ranking next year.

EDITORIAL

Although old man winter fooled us o nApril first and has been fooling us ever since, there has been a touch of spring in the high school. One girl after another has blossomed out in a new spring dsess. It makes the school room seem more cheerful to see the girls in spring dresses and wearing cheerful smiles. Maybe if we keep this up, spring will be ashamed of itself for being so tardy and will coome out of hiding—at least in time for Easter.—Nora Wellemeyer.

INQUIRING REPORTER

Which have you enjoyed more—your freshman or sophomore year of high school?

It is very hard to make a decision as to which year I really liked better. I do think that I rather enjoyed my freshman year more. First was the initiation which I got a big kick out of and then we had various parties during the year. I also took an interest in manual arts. The subjects were comparatively easier than this year, for this year we had the famous study of geometry, that is not very easy to see into.—Paul Lau.

This I believe is rather a difficult question to answer as I have enjoyed both. When I was a freshman, I felt as if I had just started to climb a high ladder. This year I am on the second step, and will soon be halfway up. When I was a freshman, I was known as being green as all freshmen are. This year I am glad to be able to say, we are looked upon as students who are not so green as we were then known to be.—Velda Schaefer.

I enjoyed my freshman year more. When I was a freshman, we had a very large class, but due to the fact that some have moved away, we now have a small class. Also last year we had more parties and picnics. Now we only have had two parties (due to the fact that the spring weather doesn't agree with the sophomores).—Arlene Kraus.

This is an awful question to ask a fellow, but I guess I can answer it In my freshman year I was very green, almost afraid to move in my seat, but I had a good time and the studies weren't very hard with the exception of English. I liked all my teachers and got along fine. In my sophomore year the studies seem a little harder, but I have made passing grades so far. I think I have had more fun this year, for I was more acquainted with the pupils and teachers, and if you should ask me what I like best, I would say my "silly sophomore" year. — Billie Lemke.

I like my sophomore year better because you are just one year closer to graduating and you are more used to school. Being a sophomore you have the honor of being a sophomore, while being a freshman you not only have the honor of being a freshman, but a greenhorn to top it off. The old saying is "Practice makes perfect" so we have the idea we are getting closer to perfect because we have had one year more practice.—Melvin Jensen.

HISTORY OUTLINES

The sophomore history class is making a thorough study of the World War, so a committee selected by Mr. Hunter, with the help of the rest of the class, is making an outline. The outline will be typed so that each person may have a copy. By this we think we may learn more about our own country in the war. Mr. Hunter has also asked for someone to volunteer to ditto a map of Europe before and after the World War, for the use of the students.—Dorothy Greiman.

CARNIVAL AND BAND NEWS

The band benefit Carnival held last Friday night proved quite a success and all members were well pleased The program was very entertaining and those present seem to have enjoyed it.

And who do you suppose the most popular boy or man in school and town—as selected by the band members—was? Mr. Hunter, of course! At the conclusion of the program, he was called to the platform and presented with a box of candy and received fifteen rahs as proof of our respect for him. Our only regret is that he doesn't get an instrument and play with us. We received $43.76. At the Legion play we sold candy, making a total of $48.14.

Next week we will list what we cleared and for what we are using the money.

We thank all of you who attended our carnival.

We have added two members to our band, Paul Schuldt and Buster Jorgenson.

Watch for future band news!

CENTRAL STATES ELECTRIC COMPANY

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building — Washington, D. C.

Washington.—President Roosevelt has submitted to congress a list of the legislation he deems necessary to have passed before the present session adjourns. He has divided it into two categories—"must" and desirable. If congress enacts only the list of "must" legislation and passes over the other group of bills which the President considers desirable, it is made to appear that the membership of the house and senate is due to suffer some of the torrid temperature and the uncomfortable humidity of a Washington summer. The President said he must have legislation extending the National Recovery administration, providing social security, eliminating public utility holding companies, increasing the loaning power of the Home Owners Loan corporation, extension of the so-called nuisance taxes which expire by limitation of law on June 30, and revision of the banking laws.

Lays Out Work for Congress

In addition, the President made known that he would like to have enacted legislation to take the profits out of war, whatever that may mean. He previously had sent a message asking enactment of a law providing for expansion of the American merchant marine through the use of ship subsidies, and he also desires to have enacted legislation setting up machinery for the settlement of labor disputes. This legislation is in the congressional hopper in the form of a bill by Senator Wagner, of New York.

The President would like to have amendments to the agricultural adjustment act in order to eliminate some of the weaknesses which the AAA people admit exist. The airmail contract situation is another matter with which Mr. Roosevelt has been concerned.

Seasoned observers recognize that this list of "must" legislation, not to mention the desired legislation, is sufficient to keep congress grinding away far into the summer. They recognize likewise that if the desired legislation later becomes of such concern that the President wants to place it on the preferred list as well, the membership of congress must be prepared to forego summer trips of any kind.

Pets of Their Own

Since a good many members of congress have grown tired of being called rubber stamps for the administration, they naturally have turned attention to legislation which they think will be helpful to their own bailiwicks, to themselves personally or from a party standpoint. Thus there have been promoted numerous pieces of legislation for which some individuals, at least, entertain greater fervor than they do for measures that were drafted by President Roosevelt's official family and transmitted to congress as administration legislation. It is the general observation that an individual, representative, or senator frequently will go much further in fighting for legislation that is his own brain child than for legislation placed before him on a silver platter such as administration proposals have been. Consequently, individual or group measures are constantly cluttering up house and senate legislative calendars. This is a factor meaning delay for administration bills.

It is to be remembered, as has been reported in these columns, that Mr. Roosevelt is unable to ward off criticism of some of his proposals. Indeed, there have been Democratic criticisms and Democratic opposition to a greater or lesser degree to all of the legislation he has proposed since congress convened last January All of which is by way of saying that congress faces weeks of committee work and floor debate despite the fact that the house Democratic leaders still retain rather solid control of a sufficient majority in the lower house of congress to drive through any pet measures for the administration. In the senate the situation is decidedly different.

Included in the legislation being fostered by individual members is the bill that would permit cabinet officers to appear on the floors of congress for questioning and explanation, such as occurs under the British and French parliamentary systems. The administration does not want this bill. It will have to exert some pressure to avoid passage. The reason is that the Roosevelt administration is no longer one in which the cabinet is dominant. Cabinet officers are only part of the scheme, and if congress wanted to inquire about the handling of relief money, which it probably will desire, it must talk with Administrator Hopkins. Mr. Hopkins is not in the cabinet. The same is true of NRA and to some extent to the AAA, although Secretary Wallace of the Department of Agriculture theoretically is a superior officer to Administrator Davis. The administrator is definitely opposed to the passage of bonus legislation for the former soldiers, sailors and marines and it looks like a Presidential veto will be necessary there. The same is true of inflationary proposals of which there are many. The situation is one, therefore, in which Mr. Roosevelt must be constantly on his guard to prevent action which he does not want as well as being fortified at all times with pressure to put through the legislation he has described as necessary. Thus it is seen he is confronted with many complications which did not disturb him in the first two sessions of New Deal congresses and these complications mean a longer life for the current session.

Some "Must" Legislation

Let us examine the status of the legislation which the President said must be passed. The outlook is something like this:

The extension of the National Recovery administration is still far off. Senate hearings are just ended and the house is still further behind. No action can be expected in either body for several weeks. The present law expires June 16.

Recently Mr. Roosevelt sent to congress a very bitter message denouncing public utility holding companies and demanding legislation eliminating them from our economic structure. The house committee considering this legislation is just winding up its hearings and the senate committee which will have jurisdiction has taken no action at all. It must be said that a hard fight is in prospect if and when this legislation reaches the stage of debate because investors in these companies are not going to have their equities destroyed while they sit idly by. These investors are doing more now than just making faces at congress and the volume of letters which members are receiving in opposition to the holding companies legislation transcends anything that ever has happened in the memory of this correspondent.

The banking legislation which Mr. Roosevelt has proposed, or which was proposed for him by Governor Eccles, the New Deal and radical governor of the federal reserve board is faced with opposition equally as bitter and as well organized as that confronting the holding companies bill. Perhaps it can be said that opposition to the banking legislation is even stronger because in that fight the President will be opposed by Senator Carter Glass of Virginia, who must be regarded as the most virulent of all the Democrats in the senate. The house banking committee has about done its job with hearings on this bill but the senate committee where the full force of the Glass opposition will be felt has not even set a date for committee consideration.

The social security bill about which Mr. Roosevelt has done much talking, because it is distinctly a reform measure, has finally been redrafted in the house while senate leadership is unable to get together on any policy respecting it. Some senators want to split up this bill and pass the section providing for old age pensions, allowing the other parts of the bill to die a slow death.

The legislation to increase by $1,750,000,000 the loaning power of the Home Owners Loan corporation probably will get through the senate without much more ado. The house passed the bill because it could not do otherwise with individual members realizing that there was a chance that some of this money would go into their particular districts. Included in this bill is a line that promises a good many hundred jobs for politicians and it is natural that the party in power is not going to overlook this possibility.

There remains on the "must" list, then, only the proposal to extend the nuisance taxes which expire at the end of June. It is probable that the bulk of these levies will be accepted by congress as necessary.

About the Future

One cannot fail, in tramping around Washington these days, to note the frequent expressions concerning the outlook for the New Deal and for President Roosevelt's personal political future. In fact, some hardboiled observers lately have been heard to say that Mr. Roosevelt is suffering from too much ballyhoo. He was put up on a pedestal that made of him in the eyes of many persons something of a superman. He himself is regarded as having contributed to this condition by his many campaign promises, some of which he has found absolutely impractical as remedies in leading the country out of the morasses and on to a more satisfactory economic plain. In truth, the President's own political colleagues have continued to depict him as an individual capable of things which no human can accomplish and this combination of circumstances is declared by many keen minded persons as likely to bring, if indeed it has not already brought, a definitely bad political reaction from the President's standpoint.

It is still fresh in the minds of men and women throughout the country how President Hoover was over-advertised as a superior person in an administrative way. Mr. Hoover suffered from too much ballyhoo to an extent greater than any other man who has served as President with the possible exception of Woodrow Wilson. When the depression came and the current turned against Mr. Hoover he was utterly powerless. With a recalcitrant congress on his hands and a dissatisfied people, Mr. Hoover met the fate that must have been expected.

RUSSIA APPROVES THE SECURITY PACT PLAN BUT POLAND REMAINS ALOOF.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
©, Western Newspaper Union.

SOVIET Russia is ready to line up with Great Britain, France and Italy in promoting the general European security pact which is the basis of England's plan for peace. This was brought out by the visit to Moscow of Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal, and his conferences with Dictator Josef Stalin and Maxim Litvinov, Soviet foreign commissar. According to the joint communique given the press, these statesmen "were of the opinion that in the present international situation it is more than ever necessary to pursue the endeavor to promote the building up of a system of collective security in Europe as contemplated in the Anglo-French communique of the third of February, and in conformity with the principles of the League of Nations."

M. Litvinov

It was made clear that Germany and Poland would be welcome to enter the arrangement, but that it would go ahead even without them.

Captain Eden then went on to Warsaw to talk things over with the Poles; and even as he was departing from Moscow the Soviet press launched another fierce attack on Germany Michael Tukhachevsky, vice commissar for defense, in an article in the newspaper Pravda, declared Germany would have an army of 840,000 by the summer, exceeding the French army by 40 per cent and almost equaling the Soviet army in size.

He charged Hitler with "lulling France to sleep" with anti-Soviet war talk in the hope France would not realize her own peril.

Tukhachevsky's view that Germany contemplates attacking France was supported by an authorized article in the weekly Journal de Moscou which asserted the leaders of the reich realized "the exceptional risk to which Germany would subject herself by invasion of the tremendous territories of the U. S. S. R.—a country possessing powerful armaments and unlimited opportunities for improving and increasing these armaments."

"It is almost probable," the Journal said, "that under certain circumstances Hitler will prefer other fields of aggression, and an intensified revision of the map of Europe will be started not in the east but in the west."

POLAND appears to have decided to play a lone hand in the European embroglio, though she remains friendly to Germany. It is reported that Captain Eden's visit to Warsaw was as disappointing as was that of Sir John Simon to Berlin. The Polish government is determined to sign no pact that would commit the nation to fight for Russia against Germany or for Germany against Russia and France, nor will it permit either German or Russian troops to be transported across Poland. The Polish statesmen say they will sign a series of bilateral pacts, and will go as far as any other nation in parallel disarmament. They assert that they have no alliance with Germany, though their mutual troubles have been settled for the next ten years, and that the alliance with France still holds good.

FROM Tokyo there came a statement indicating that Japan would give at least moral support to the European powers that are seeking agreements to counteract Hitler's move for the re-armament of Germany. It was given out by Eiji Amau, the frequently quoted spokesman for the foreign office. He said Japan will hold aloof from the European crisis and that there would be no far eastern Locarno pact, but that "we cannot think of any alliance with Germany." Tokyo, asserted Amau, is ready to discuss with Russia some degree of demilitarization of the eastern frontiers.

Eiji Amau

NINETEEN cardinals met with Pope Pius in a secret consistory, and to them he delivered an emphatic denunciation of war, which, he said, "would be so enormous a crime, so foolish a manifestation of fury, we believe it absolutely impossible." If, however, there is someone who wishes to commit "this nefarious crime," then, the holy father said, he could do nothing else than pray to God to "destroy those people who desire war." At this moment, he continued, the "clamor of war is universally diffused and the cause of agitation to all and arouses in everyone the greatest fear."

The consistory approved the canonization of Blessed Thomas More, King Henry VIII's chancellor, and Bishop John Fisher of England, who lost their heads for opposing Henry's marriage to Anne Boleyn.

OBEYING alleged directions from the yacht on which President Roosevelt was fishing in Florida waters, the majority in the house refused to accept the restrictions injected in the work relief bill and sent it back to conference to have these removed.

The restrictions objectionable to the administration were those requiring senate confirmation of administrative officers of the program and that in loans and grants to states at least one-third of the money should be expended for direct labor. The latter requirement, according to Secretary Ickes and others, would result in the exclusion of rural electrification, slum clearance and similar projects.

Defending the move to send the bill back to conference, Buchanan of Georgia said: "The President is assuming responsibility. All we ask is to give him a bill that he can work on in shifting from dole to employment."

In replying to Buchanan, Representative Robert Bacon (Rep., N. Y.) contended that the labor provision was needed in order to "kick out pet local projects" and afford as much direct relief of unemployment as possible.

"Congress has reached a pretty low ebb," declared Minority Leader Bertrand Snell (Rep., N. Y.), "when it can't even pass on a conference report without receiving orders from the Chief Executive."

STANLEY REED, the new solicitor general, obtained from the Supreme court permission to dismiss the government's appeal in the Belcher lumber code case. Therefore there probably will be no decision as to the constitutionality of the national industrial recovery act by the chief tribunal before congress takes action on the bill to extend the recovery law.

Belcher was indicted for violating the hour and wage provisions of the lumber code but Judge W. I. Grubb of the Federal District court in Birmingham held against the government. The indictment was dismissed. Grubb ruled the NRA law unconstitutional. The government appealed to the Supreme court in an effort to expedite the decision.

REPLACEMENT of the AAA's system of crop control is seen as a future potentiality of a new organization established at the Department of Agriculture under Rexford G. Tugwell. The organization consolidates federal agencies dealing with soil erosion, and Tugwell is expected to direct the expenditure of about a billion dollars in public works funds on the public land program. At present plans call for retirement of millions of acres of marginal lands now contributing to surpluses, which experts contend will prove a more effective way of dealing with overproduction than AAA's policy of taxing commodities for acreage slashes. The latter is meeting increased opposition, due to rising living costs and increasing competition from foreign powers. There will probably be little immediate change in crop control plans, since the Tugwell program will require considerable time before it can be operated effectively.

R. G. Tugwell

FOR the second time the United States Supreme court reversed the convictions and death sentences of two of the Scottsboro negroes who were accused of assault on two white girls. The court held that since negroes in Alabama are not permitted to serve on juries, they are denied "equal protection of the laws" in violation of the Fourteenth amendment. It declared the state court erred in not quashing the indictments.

This was a big victory for the colored race, but in another decision by the Supreme court the negroes were the losers. The tribunal ruled that the Democratic party in Texas is a voluntary association, not subject to control by the state legislature, and as such may exclude colored persons from voting in its primaries.

THROUGH the efforts of Donald Richberg, chairman of the NIRB, an agreement was reached by the bituminous coal operators and the United Mine Workers, whereby the prevailing coal code is extended to June 16 and a threatened strike of about half a million miners averted. The present wages and hours of work are continued. President Lewis of the miners insisted the union had not yielded to the operators; but the fact remained that if it had not consented to the agreement Mr. Richberg could and would have extended the code by executive order. This would have placed the union in the undesired position of opposing and defying the administration, and would have weakened the effect of its advocacy of the Wagner labor disputes bill, the Black-Connery bill and the Guffy bill which would virtually convert the bituminous coal industry into a public utility.

THERE were further dust storms in the already severely afflicted plateau district of southwest Kansas, southeast Colorado and parts of New Mexico, Texas and Oklahoma. In western Kansas the farmers began the construction of earthen breastworks against the wind, and a federal appropriation of $250,000,000 for this work was received. Fears that the dust storms would cause an epidemic of pneumonia were allayed when it was found that there were no germs of that disease on laboratory plates exposed in the dust-filled atmosphere by aviators.

Tornadoes in Mississippi and Texas resulted in the deaths of at least half a dozen persons and the injury of many others.

WHY SHOP-TALK IS SO POPULAR

Makes for Forgetfulness of One's Self.

One of the last arts to mature in a young society is the art of conversation. At its best, conversation is a kind of impromptu orchestra, each player improvising in perfect harmony, time and tune, tossing the theme from instrument to instrument, the themes developing and changing, discarded or resumed at the caprice of the players. This of course presupposes that the subject of the conversation be impersonal, that it be free to range pretty much over the whole field of human experience. Such conversation is first met with in the form of shop-talk, and the reason shop-talk among people of the same interests or profession (in which is included school studies) is so popular may be that here, perhaps for the first time, we learn how delightful it can be to exercise our minds in company with others to the total exclusion and forgetfulness of our tiresome selves. That is why students talk so eagerly about their school tasks, why business and professional people so madden innocent by-sitters with technical discussions of the minutiae of their trades; why artists, musicians and scholars persecute the public with their passionate dissertations. But there is a stage beyond this, where human interests are broad enough and deep enough to embrace everybody, where the whole of experience is the subject.

"Clever but undiscriminating," "undiscriminating because the past is not alive to them." "Highbrow? Anything rather than that!"—this is a good-natured appraisal of how our sophisticated New Yorkers make it appear to Europeans. The objection to them is that they do not know enough, either about the past or their own country. But the condition is temporary. A passion for learning has sprung up in our land since the war which, given time, should turn out a crop of men and women able to interpret America to Europe as it really is, and not as a glorified Wisecrackiana. After the fire of the World war, after the whirlwind of the Jazz decade, after the earthquake of the economic depression cometh the still small voice of the spirit.—"Uncle Dudley," in the Boston Globe.

On his last trip to Germany, Mr. U. G. Smid brought along a rare assortment of fine phonograph records, and having no machine to play them on, he brought them to the Wellemeyer Store, where he was welcome to bring his friends from time to time and play the records for their entertainment. This arrangement worked fine for several years until just a few weeks ago, a check up revealed that about five records were missing.

It it not probable that.. these records were.. stolen.. from.. the store, for these reasons: 1st, this comunity at the present time is remarkably free from shop lifters; 2nd, women, when they do steal, take only beauty items, such as powder, cosmetics, etc.; men, when they steal, take only gloves, overalls or hand.. tools; children, when they steal take such things as candy, gum and school supplies.

After displaying all kinds of merchandise for many years, my judgment would.. be that.. these records were not stolen from the store... It is possible,.. however, that during the rush of business the records may have been placed in the drawer of a dresser, chest or buffett, and when this item was sold the records could have gone with the furniture.

Please, those of you who have purchased furniture from us since the first of the year, make a search for the records in the drawers, and if you should find these German records, bring them back to our store. A reward of 75c each will be paid you for the return of these records.

espite several unfavorable situns confronting the dairy indus- prices throughout the year are ected to hold higher than a year . The recent falling off of butter es, although unwanted by dairy mers, tended to check imports is stimulating consumption in. Also because of short feed ples and the poor condition pases are bound to be in this spring is safe to gamble that production not increase as in normal rs. This, too, will tend to hold es up.

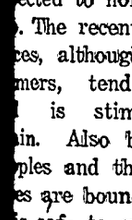
Another favorable factor is the leted cold storage holdings. On rch 1, only 8 million pounds of amery butter were in storage. is was the lowest for any month ce May 1929, and except for rch 1, 1927, the lowest for March on record.

YOUR CHILD AND THE SCHOOL

By Dr. ALLEN G. IRELAND
Director, Physical and Health Education, New Jersey State Department of Public Instruction

Learning Health For A Purpose

The idea is not new, but it took an ingenious teacher to put it into effect.



The place was a small high school. To make up standard teams nearly every student had to participate. Their opponents, the larger schools, had the advantage in numbers and facilities. But the spirit was there, so they set out to make up for their shortcomings. And they did it by making a thorough study of healthful living.

The principal of that school told me that every pupil knew and observed the rules of nutrition. Smoking was taboo. Dances and parties were shortened, more study was done at school, and the radio was turned off at a stated hour when the importance of sleep was learned. Candy and sodas were definitely out. Colds received early care. In brief, it was just a case of common sense application, without overemphasis. Anyway, it worked.

Next week Dr. Ireland will discuss the large subject of playground accidents and how to avoid them.

IT REQUIRES GRAIN, TOO

A common spring expression is, "We will certainly be glad when pasture time comes, so we won't have to feed any more!" The dairyman who believes such a statement is one whose highest production comes when milk is the lowest in price and vice versa.

New pasture grass is palatable. Cows like it and will leave other feeds for it. However, pasture grass and especially that which is available early in the season, cannot furnish nutrients enough for high producing cows nor for cows of only reasonably high production, if cows are to maintain body weight also.

Recently five cows from as many record-keeping herds in Indiana were found to have made low average production only 5,063 lbs. of milk and 202 lbs. of fat per year. A study of the methods of feeding, showed that one of their greatest faults was the use made of pasture. Some of these cows were put on pasture too early in the spring, fed no grain while on pasture or left on pasture too late in the fall, some were subjected to a combination of all of these conditions.

The same cows were put together in a herd during the next year and better methods of feeding and management were practiced. The cows were not turned to pasture until the pasture grass had made good growth. Throughout the summer, a satisfactory grain mixture was fed in addition to the pasture when the growth of grass stopped. That these better methods of handling cows on pasture gave results was evidenced when the average production of these same cows increased to 8,662 lbs. of milk and 316 lbs. of fat.

Increases of 71 percent in milk production and 56 percent in fat production were traceable in a large part, to the feeding of grain on pasture.

PLANTING DEMONSTRATIONS APRIL 22ND

Monday, April 22nd, a landscape planting demonstration will be given at the farm homes of J. J. Cook and Ben V. Greiman.

Mr. Morris, landscape specialist of the Iowa State College will be present, and anyone interested in shrubbery planting is invited to attend either of the two places mentioned. The forenoon demonstration will begin at 10 o'clock at the Greiman home and the afternoon program at 1:30 at the J. J. Cook farm in Avery township.

Farmers Union Paper Voices Views On Farm Crop Imports

FARMER WRATH OVER IMPORT WAS BLOW TO AAA

Three Times 1934 Produce Enters Ports; Housewives Strike At High Meat Cost.

WASHINGTON—Wrath of the nation's farmers over the torrent of imports has done as much as any other thing to knock the AAA off its pins, it is believed. The loss of even their own markets after Roosevelt and Wallace had promised them return of foreign trade has set the farmers to boiling and their wrath has been felt in Washington.

Figures for February show that imports were twice as high as a year ago, and it is believed that the March figures, out soon, will show about a triple increase over March 1934. Quantity of farm imports in February last year was about 15 million units and this year 37. The value jumped from 3 million to 10 million.

Five times as much butter came into this country in February, 1935, than in the same month in 1934, the total of the month being 3,000,000 pounds; 38,000 head of cattle arrived, six times as much as in the corresponding month a year ago; pork, 168,000, or 34 times as much; canned meats, 4,000,000 lbs., three times as much; corn, 1,800,000 bushels, or 121 times as much; and wheat 1,000,000 bushels, 28 times as much.

The agriculture department has stated that imports of foodsttuffs are expected to increase. It is reported that more than 13,000,000 bushels of corn have been purchased in the Argentine for shipment to this country as soon as it is available. During the first two weeks of March, 2,200,000 bushels of corn arrived, mostly from Roumania and the Argentine, but Canadian and Mexican exports probably will greatly increase the total when the figures become available. Total imports since last July through January were 4,694,000. Corn imports are expected to exceed any period in history.

Meanwhile Sen Frazier of North Dakota said he would urge the secretary of the treasury to impose a higher tax on Polished rye because of its import into this country. About 1,235,000 bushels arrived in February.

It is reported from Canada that cattle circles are encouraged by the shortage of cattle in the United States and plan future shipments.

At the same time, the hatred of the AAA by American housewives grew. In San Francisco two women's organizations called a strike against the high price of meat. A boycott was begun.

Stung by the feeling of American consumers. Secretary of Agriculture gave out some figures which he said showed the price of meat was below that of 1930, while failing to point out that the income of the masses was less than half the figure at that time.

Food prices in restaurants were also hiked as a result of the destruction program, while the income of the patrons have not increased.—from The Iowa Union Farmer.

PREPARE CORN-HOG DATA FOR STATE BOARD OF REVIEW

With the signing of applications for corn-hog contracts completed, the Hancock County corn-hog allotment committee this week attacked the task of checking applications preparatory to submitting county production data to the State Board of Review of Des Moines.

Approximately 1565 applications have been signed in this county, a tentative final check-up this week by the allotment committee indicated. This number is 287 short of the number signed in 1934, according to Ben V. Greiman, chairman.

Mr. Greiman and members of the county allotment committee, however, are of the opinion that practically as much acreage is represented in the 1935 contract as was under contract last year. The rules this year permit several farms to be combined under one contract which in 1934 would each have required a separate contract.

Outdoor Play Ground Is Epworth League's Goal

ORCHARD SPRAY SHOULD COVER TREES COMPLETELY

Thoroughness is what H. E. Nichols, State College extension horticulturist, stresses when orchardists query him regarding early season sprays. Too many small operators using small sprayers fail to get results from their spraying because they do not thoroughly cover the tree, especially the top and the inside portion.

"In the early spraying done should be taken to see that all the wood foliage and bark are thoroughly covered. Complete coverage of the trees both before and after blossoming will control apple scab.

Some fruit growers say their sprays reach the tops of the trees easily. In some cases the stream thrown by the sprayer is coarse and heavy and will not give complete coverage. A fine mist is most desirable. From 4 to 6 gallons of spray material should be used on each average tree. Orchardists using less than that probably are not doing a good job.

When Cream Won't Whip

Whipping cream that doesn't whip has precipitated many a domestic crisis:

A woman who keeps honey on hand however, is safe from this particular brand of crisis. All she need do to make the cream whip is add just a few rops of honey—not even enough to make the cream taste sweet.

Stock should be kept off pasture until the grass gets a good start.

METHODIST EPWORTH LEAGUE SPONSORED ENTERTAINMENT

Proceds Will Be Used To Buy Game Equipment For Young People

The Klemme and Liberty Epworth Leagues last week sponsored two magical programs, one given at the Liberty church on Wednesday evening and the other in Klemme on Friday evening. Net proceeds of the two entertainments brought in about $28. The League members are endeavoring to raise at least $50 or more with which to buy equipment for games that the young people of the community can enjoy during the summer months. They have in mind such things as equipment for a croquet court, possibly a tennis court, other outdoor playground equipment that will give boys and girls and the young people of the community healthful entertainment.

The League members are trying to put over a worthwhile project and the good people of this community should get back of them.

If you think the young people of this community should have good, clean, wholesome entertainment and sport, why not reach into your pocket and pull out a bill, hand it to Rev. Zabilka or any League member? You will then be doing your share to giving boys and girls of this community something worth while to do this summer.

Charivari Held For Newlyweds

"POKER WORK." A Burglary That Did Not Work as It Was Planned. Read This Dramatic Short Story in The American Weekly, the Magazine Distributed With NEXT SUNDAY'S CHICAGO HERALD AND EXAMINER.

Famous, and Forgotten

PART II

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THEY'RE famous—and forgotten!

Their names have become common words—nouns, verbs, adjectives and parts of familiar phrases—words used in everyday speech by thousands of people who would find it very difficult to give you any definite information about the man or woman whose name and fame they are thus helping to perpetuate.

Have you ever shouted: "Let 'er go, Gallagher!" when you were ready to start on a swift ride? If so, you're only repeating the words of Judge Beaver of Morgan county, Kentucky, during a match trotting race in Tipton county. His fast little mare was being driven by City Marshal Gallagher of Harrodsburg and at the end of the first half mile the two horses were neck and neck. "Let 'er go, Gallagher!" shouted the judge when he noticed that the marshal seemed to be holding his entry in. So Gallagher did and the little mare won by almost a dozen lengths.

Ever hear somebody say, "Well, that was a Garrison finish!" No, it hasn't anything to do with the military force holding a fort. Instead, it perpetuates the fame of a jockey—Edward ("Snapper") Garrison—who died about five years ago. For it was "Snapper" who gave to the argot of the turf the expression "a Garrison finish," meaning to come from nowhere with an outsider and win. Eventually the public took over the expression for general use as a picturesque symbol of an unexpected victory after a stirring last-minute "drive" in sports, a political campaign or any kind of contest.

Joseph Ignace Guillotin, a gentle Paris physician, appeared before the national assembly of France on December 1, 1789. "Now with my machine, messieurs, I whisk off your heads in a twinkling of the eye and you never know it!" he said. A droll one, that Doctor Guillotin—he would have all die comfortably and with equal honor by means of an ax driven by a machine. The national assembly accepted his design, named it in honor of him—but prefixed it with La and added an e. So La Guillotine became the terrible "heroine" of the French Revolution and before the Reign of Terror had run its course thousands died in her sharp embrace.

Have you ever "run like Sam Hill" to get somewhere? If so, the man who set the pace for you was Col. Samuel Hill (1678-1752) of Guilford, Conn. He was elected to the general assembly time after time and also served as justice of the New Haven county court, town clerk, "Clerk of the Proprietors of the Common and Undivided Land," clerk of the probate court and judge of probate. In fact, he was so popular with the voters and was so continuously elected to office that the highest praise which could be bestowed upon a political candidate was to say that he "ran like Sam Hill."

The application of the word lynching to summary execution of a person accused of a crime, without benefit of a fair trial, does a grave injustice to a Revolutionary patriot, Col. Charles Lynch, who was born in Virginia in 1736. Elected to the house of burgesses in 1767, he was made a justice of the peace in 1774 and at the outbreak of the Revolution he used stern methods in suppressing Tory conspiracies. Although he arbitrarily sentenced them to prison or to exile, there is no evidence that he ever sentenced any of them to death. So there is a vast difference between the ruthlessness of bloodthirsty mobs who interpret "lynch law" as the right to hang a man without trial or burn a man at the stake and the stern justice of Charles Lynch who was a regularly elected magistrate.

And speaking of Tories, we are indebted to one of them for some of our comfort in motoring. He was a Scotchman, John Loudon Macadam (1756-1836) who came to America in 1770 but because of his Loyalist sympathies during the Revolution was forced to go back to Scotland. From 1810 to 1815 he conducted experiments in road surfacing which resulted in the type that now bears his name—macadam.

We can thank another Scot, too, for being able to keep dry in wet weather—Charles Macintosh (1766-1843), whose experiments produced waterproof cloth and gave us the mackintosh.

Consult Mr. Webster's big book and you'll find "maverick" defined as "an unbranded animal, esp. "a motherless calf, formerly customarily claimed by the first one branding it" and "mavericking" is a recognized legal term for illegal appropriation of unbranded cattle. Why?

Well, Samuel A. Maverick, a graduate of Yale college in the class of 1825, was one of the founders of Texas independence and a member of the congress of the Republic of Texas in 1845. The exact details of how his name came to be perpetuated in a common Western word are somewhat disputed. One account states that a neighbor who owed Maverick a debt of $400 paid it off by giving him 1,200 head of longhorn cattle, whereupon Maverick turned them over to a family of negro slaves with the understanding that they should have the natural increase of the herd.

But these negroes were a shiftless set and allowed the cattle that thus came to them to roam at will in the long grass along Matagorda bay. In a few years there were hundreds of these unbranded cattle and people often asked, "Whose cattle are these?" to which the usual reply was, "They're Maverick's." As time went on the term "mavericks" came to be applied to all unbranded cattle—they were not Samuel A. Maverick's cattle, they were just mavericks, nobody's cattle.

Another account says that during the Civil war nearly all of Colonel Maverick's employees entered the Confederate army, so that his cattle ran wild and remained unbranded. So they were "Maverick's cattle" until some one else clapped his brand on them to make them his own and gradually all stray cattle became "mavericks."

Perhaps as you read this article you're lolling back in a morris chair (invented by William Morris) and enjoying the soothing companionship of Milady Nicotine. If so, just remember that it was Jean Sieur de Vitle-Main Nicot (1530-1600), who first introduced tobacco into France and thereby got his name associated with it. Incidentally, he was something of a scholar, too, for in 1606 he compiled the first French dictionary so you can thank him, too, for making it easier for you to "parlez vous."

Another Frenchman made it safer for you to drink milk without fear of getting disease from unhealthy cows. It was Louis Pasteur (1827-95), the French chemist, and bacteriologist, who is responsible for pasteurizing milk. He was also the man who freed humanity from its fear of mad dogs, for, thanks to him, rabies or hydrophobia is not the terror it once was.

Walk past the window of a railroad station almost any hour, day or night, and you'll hear a clicking, chattering sound coming from a bunch of gadgets on a desk within. It's two or more "lightning-snatchers" (telegraphers) talking to each other in the dots and dashes of the Morse code—a never-ceasing paean of praise for Samuel Finley Breese

JOEL R. POINSETT

Morse (1791-1872), the American portrait painter who invented the telegraph and revolutionized long-distance communication.

When poinsettias flame with their scarlet beauty at Christmas time it should remind us of Joel R. Poinsett (1779-1851) the South Carolinian who was United States minister to Mexico and who brought back with him when he returned from beyond the Rio Grande the beautiful flower which bears his name. Besides his service as a diplomat in Latin America he was also our seventeenth secretary of war.

Thousands and thousands of railway sleeping cars which travel from one end of the country to the other every day are perpetual advertisements for George Mortimer Pullman (1831-97), the New York cabinetmaker who transformed an old day coach into the first sleeping car and made long journeys on the railroad more endurable.

It was a French physicist who gave us the ampere as the unit of measurement of the strength of an electrical current but it was a German electrician, Georg Simon Ohm (1787-1854), who gave us the ohm as the unit of electrical resistance; an Italian physicist, Count Alessandro Volta (1745-1827), who made the volt as the standard unit of electromotive force; and a Scotch engineer, James Watt (1736-1819) who established the watt as the electrical unit of power.

If you're not a teetotaler, which would you rather have to drink—some negus, a gin rickey, a Tom and Jerry or a Ramos gin fizz? If it's the first, you can be grateful to Col. Francis Negus, a British officer of Queen Anne's day, who gave to the world hot spiced wine which bears his name. If the second, thank Col. Joseph K. Rickey of Fulton, Mo. If the third, "Prof." Jerry Thomas, famous bar-tender in the old Planters hotel in St. Louis and the old Metropolitan hotel in New York, is responsible. Not only was he the greatest of all American concocters of alcoholic cheer but he was also a pioneer minstrel showman on the Pacific coast, owner of the music hall in New York where Lew Dockstader got his start and the sponsor of the first public exhibition of Thomas Nast's cartoons. As for the fourth, it was invented by Henry Charles Ramos of New Orleans who for 40 years conducted in that city an exemplary bar room in which no one was ever allowed to drink more than he could carry.

No doubt, many of the men who patronized the bars of Messrs. Thomas and Ramos wore sideburns, thereby helping immortalize a Civil war general, governor of Rhode Island and United States senator who was the leading exponent of that kind of facial adornment. He was Ambrose Everett Burnside (1824-81) and at first his kind of whiskers were known as Burnsides. Then the wags reversed the word and we got sideburns.

What is a political campaign without at least one "roorback"? And what politician, when he employs such a last-minute attack on his rival, knows (or cares, for that matter) that he is helping perpetuate the fame of Orville A. Roorback, a forgotten American author and bookseller who from 1820 to 1860 compiled the first bibliography of American literature? According to Mr. Webster, who defines it as "a defamatory falsehood published for political effect," it originated in 1844 "when there was published, to the detriment of James K. Polk, then a candidate for President, an extract purporting to be from Roorback's 'Tour Through the Western and Southern States in 1836.'" In recent years it has lost some of its original meaning and now carries some of the implication of being a boomerang because frequently the reaction on its author is unfavorable.

Whenever we go on a picnic we should remember that sporting Englishnobleman, John, earl of Sandwich, who did not like to stop his play, whether it was cricket or "rugger," long enough to eat. So he suggested that his servant cut meat and serve the slices between bread and that's how we got the sandwich.

So we're grateful to him but what shall we say about Antoine (also known as Adolphe) Joseph Sax (1814-94) the Belgian musical instrument maker? For he invented the saxophone and if all the jokes about amateur saxophone players are true, he should never have done it!

A sandwich and a saxophone seem like rather trivial word-memorials to men when you look upon the big trees of California, the biggest and oldest living things in the world. For they are Sequoias and they stand as perpetual reminders of a half-breed Indian—Sequoyah (1760-1843), who also bore the white name of George Gist (or Guess or Guest). He was the man who invented an alphabet for his people, the Cherokee Indians, and in other ways aided them in "traveling the white man's road."

In contrast to such a splendid memorial is the left-hand compliment to the Frenchman Etienne Silhouette (1709-67). When he was made controleur-generale of France in 1757 he immediately instituted such widespread economies that everything cheap was called a "silhouette." Long afterwards (1825) when shadow portraits, cut out of black paper at a very trifling cost, became popular, his name was attached to them.

General Burnside's sideburns are not seen on men's faces so much these days but the van dyke beard still is and that's because Sir Anthony Van Dyck (1599-1641), the Flemish portrait painter, wore that kind.

And now that we're nearing the conclusion of this article let's end it with a wallop. By doing that we'll pay tribute to Sir John Wallop, a British general, who beat and battered the French so badly that his victories became known as "wallops." From that start it wasn't long before people began saying: "Let's wallop them!" and that's why we're still saying it today.

Dental Hygiene

The Road to Health

By DR. R. ALLEN GRIFFITH

DENTAL PAIN KILLING

THE fear of pain is man's heritage. An American dentist reduced that heritage forever by making the first practical use of nitrous oxide (laughing gas) as an anesthetic.

Anesthesia really was discovered on December 11, 1844, by Horace Wells, a dentist of Hartford, Conn., when he offered himself as a possible martyr to suffering humanity, by inhaling nitrous oxide and having a tooth extracted. In January, 1845, Doctor Wells took his discovery to Boston and operated before the medical college. He was ridiculed and pronounced a fraud. The wise men of Boston pointed the finger of mockery and cried "humbug," determined to break upon the rocks of derision any man from the country who supposed the wise men of the city ridiculous enough to believe his story.

Dentists in their eagerness to relieve human suffering and pain, have for years successfully used local anesthetics such as cocain and novocain. In later years they have developed the use of a combination of nitrous oxide and oxygen, the safest general anesthetic known. The death rate from nitrous oxide and oxygen is estimated at one in a million, against one in thirty thousand in ether.

Dentistry's latest gift to suffering mankind is conductive anesthesia or nerve blocking, by which the area controlled by a nerve is rendered insensible to pain. Surgery is now able to perform major operations such as laparotomies and amputations by injecting the nerve trunks with novocain. What would be man's fear and dread of dental and surgical operations without the gracious sleep of anesthesia?

Through anesthesia, dentistry has given to humanity one of its greatest boons, and it is hard to conceive that in the past few years, bills have been introduced in some of our state legislatures to prevent dentists from giving anesthetics. However, it is only in line with the profound scientific ignorance of politicians.

The dentist has succeeded in taking the "dent" out of dentistry. Where an individual suffers from pain in his teeth, it is his own fault. The modern up-to-date dentist has so many ways of relieving pain that no one need to suffer from their teeth. His latest and greatest gift to humanity, however, is the prevention of systemic disease through the proper care of the teeth.

Proper dental care will not only prevent pain and preserve the teeth but will preserve general health as well.

TEETH AND TONSILS

WHEN you smile in a mirror what do you see?

Do you see a clean, healthy mouth and a row of pearls, or a neglected oral cavity with decaying, uncared-for teeth?

The mucous membrane of the mouth is highly resistant to the invasion of bacteria. If this were not true, we would all be in constant trouble from mouth infections, for it is easy to demonstrate that every mouth in any civilized community contains a great variety of bacteria, most of them of highly virulent strains.

During the past few years it has been the practice to remove the tonsils, but to overlook their source of infection, the teeth. Let us see how the tonsils become infected.

The substance of healthy tonsils is composed of small nodules of lymphatic tissues arranged in groups of 12 to 15 crypts and connective tissue, blood vessels and a few nerve fibers. From the crypts numerous follicles branch out into the substance of the tonsil by means of irregular channels.

Surrounding each follicle is a plexus of lymphatic vessels, and the whole is covered by mucous membrane.

While well protected from the outside, yet, because of their peculiar construction and the numerous lymphatic plexuses and crypts, they are ideal incubators for micro-organisms that may once succeed in penetrating the lymph channels. The lymphatic vessels of the gums terminate in the submaxilary glands. The lymphatic vessels leading from the plexuses surrounding the tonsilar crypts also pass to the submaxilary glands. It is therefore readily seen that bacteria may pass almost directly from the gum margins to the tonsils.

Bacteria passing into the lymph channels may easily pass on to the tonsils and be enormously multiplied, both in number and virulence, and be passed through the submaxillary glands to the deep cervical glands, and finally on to other parts of the body without the surface of the tonsil even being disturbed. This is why the removal of the tonsils, while immediately helpful, does not always remove the source of the trouble. The same condition still remains, and operation after operation frequently succeed each other as the lowered resistance of some other point causes it to become infected.

If the teeth are properly cared for first, and the crypts of the tonsils carefully cleaned out, the tonsils may frequently be saved. In any event the teeth should be the first consideration, for in treating diseases resulting from focal infection the original point of infection must be eradicated.

Smart for School or Work in Office

PATTERN 2085

When a girl leaves the house before nine every morning, whether she's off to school or to work, she needs at least one well-tailored frock in her wardrobe, one that will take her smartly through long busy hours and bring her home at night looking as freshly dressed as when she started. Designed along tailored lines this frock adds a becoming "little boy" collar to its youthful yoke and tops its smart front bodice pleats with buttoned-down tabs that look for all the world like two perky little pockets. The skirt boasts a panel in front which ends in two inverted pleats, and there is another inverted pleat at the back. The full back gathered to the yoke is the last word in chic.

Pattern 2085 is available only in sizes 10, 12, 14, 16 and 18. Size 16 takes 2⅞ yards 54 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS 15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Erroneous Belief That Bees Know Their Owners

"Bees never come to know their owner," says James I. Hambleton, agriculturist in the bureau of entomology, dispelling the belief that beekeepers do not get stung, because their bees know them. "Every person who works with bees will be stung occasionaly. The layman who is stung most often is probably nervous and afraid of bees. Apiarists are well aware that their bees never get to know them. One who understands bees can work as safely in another apiary as in his own."

Bee specialists also point out that the worker bees, which do the stinging, do so only in defense of their hive, and even then only a few assume the responsibility of guards, leaving the others free to go about their work. If all bees rushed at once to the defense of the hive, and were successful in stinging their victim, there would be no workers left, because in stinging, a bee not only loses its sting but also loses its life. Away from the hive, bees are intent upon their work and can scarcely be induced to sting, unless they are caught and crushed.—Boston Transcript.

SHAMROCK BLARNEY

Six weeks tests have come and gone and we are here, thinner, paler but triumphant, for we have mastered them and are still intact.

Superintendent Hunter is now seen driving his new Chevrolet.

The date of the Senior class play has been changed to the third and fourth of May.

Spring baseball has been started, and Coach Kingery is putting the boys through their rounds to get the stiff muscles limber again after the rest from basketball.

The seniors who have not yet received their pictures are anxiously waiting for the studio to send them and think perhaps that the photographers are saving the best ones to the last.

Mr. Kingery brought some Popular Mechanics magazines to school and now many of the students are trying to think of a new novelty invention.

The freshman class was to have had the "Squealer" in charge this week, but postponed their turn until after six weeks' tests. Therefore this week's news was written on short notice.

CLASS PICTURES

Many of the members of the senior class have received their class pictures. As many as I have seen are really good—but then why shouldn't they be???

Doing a little eaves-dropping the other day, I heard one senior who was wondering just how his class would look hanging up in front of the assembly. I'm sure it will do very well. Many K. H. S. students spend their time criticizing, enjoying onvying and remarking about the pictures of previous classes.

How would the students spend their leisure time if the pictures were unexpectedly removed. — A Senior.

BOOK REPORTS

(The object of the tabloid is to condense the theme of a complete book into a 50 word summary. It is more difficult than writing several pages.)

The House of Seven Gables

David Copperfield

Story relates incidents connected with the life of David Copperfield —unhappy boyhood days, early realization of the cruelty of life, fear of not being wanted—a change, life with an aunt, love, death of the loved one, and finally a more abundant love and marriage with a childhood companion.—R. W.

Ivanhoe

A most interesting tale of life in the old medieval period as told by the famous English author, Sir Walter Scott. In it is portrayed the exciting incidents that took place between the Normans and the Saxons, following the Norman Conquest.—B. L.

Keeper of The Keys

Charlie Chan, the great Chinese detective is again at work, this time to solve the mysterious murder of Elsia Landinia in a lonely lodge in the north woods. Everyone is suspected of the murder until finally the one least suspected is proved guilty. Lots of excitement.—E. J.

Grades 1 and 2

All seven first graders had perfect scores in Spelling last Friday.

Junior had a perfect Spelling score during the tast six weeks period. Edward, Ewald and Lavonne H. missed only once word.

We are starting to make a movie of the story "The Tale of Peter Rabbitt."

Our sand table also shows pic- of the above story.

Ewald and Lavonne H. have given us some very interesting demonstrations on how to get ready for school during our Health class.

We have made several Easter posters and April pictures and cutouts.

WORK RELIEF ACT SIGNED BY PRESIDENT—A. F. OF L. BACKS THE TIRE STRIKE.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
©, Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, deeply tanned and in good physical condition, was landed at Jacksonville, Fla., by the destroyer Farragut and started immediately for New York, to attend the funeral of his cousin, Warren Delano Robbins, after which he returned to Washington. Aboard his special train the President read through the $4,880,000,000 work relief bill as it was finally passed by both houses of congress, called for pen and ink and appended his signature to the largest appropriation measure ever enacted by congress. There were some features of it, agreed upon in the senate and house conference, which he did not like, but he said those who had studied it recommended its approval.

Harry Hopkins

The President at once signed two allocations from the amount appropriated. The first was $125,000,000 to the administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief administratoin, in order that relief might not stop. The second was $30,000,000 for continuation of the emergency conservation work.

In Washington the Republicans and some others discussed with dissatisfaction the probability that Harry L. Hopkins, relief administrator, would be the President's chief assistant in carrying out the vast work relief program.

"It is extremely fortunate for Mr. Hopkins that, if he is going to be the lord high distributor of the money, the bill is so drawn that he won't have to be confirmed by the senate," said Senator Vandenberg of Michigan.

Representative Snell of New York, the Republican leader in the house, declared it was "a sad commentary that a man like Hopkins," who had termed critics of work-relief methods "d—n dumb," should "appear to be in line to be clothed with extraordinary grants of power over the greatest sum of money ever appropriated."

As fixed up in conference, the act does not require senate confirmation of administrators already in the employ of the government. That includes Hopkins, Secretary Ickes, and Rexford G. Tugwell, all considered probabilities as members of the board that will administer the work relief fund.

Work for a total of 3,500,000 destitute persons is contemplated under the relief bill. Officials estimate 2,500,000 of these already are working for relief payments. According to plans, these are to be absorbed by the new work program on July 1, leaving jobs to be found for 1,000,000 more. It was said that soil erosion control projects and rural electrification would be relied on heavily at the outset of the drive to increase the number at work. Later, officials said, the present work-relief program will be "pruned" to provide labor for other projects.

Robert C. Fechner, director of the civilian conservation corps, announced that his organization hoped to increase its strength from 370,000 to 600,000 men under the terms of the bill. He said this would call for the establishment of about 900 camps and the assignment of 10,000 corps commanders.

SOCIALISTS and Catholics of Danzig combined to give Chancellor Hitler of Germany his first big setback. In the free city's parliamentary election the Nazis polled 60.6 per cent of the total vote, but failed to get the two-thirds majority of the seats that would give them complete control of parliament. Hitler and his followers had hoped Danzig would follow the lead of the Saar and return to the reich, and this may yet be the result, for the population of the city is more than 90 per cent German. But the Nazis were defeated in their attempt to lay the groundwork for the suppression of all other political parties and the establishment of a dictatorship. Presumably their next step will be to vote for a change in the Free City's constitution and to ask the League of Nations, which administers the city through a commissioner, to permit a plebiscite on return to the reich. This was openly discussed by Paul Joseph Goebbels, German propaganda minister, during the hot campaign in Danzig carried on by the Nazis. Poland was enraged by the violent methods of the Hitlerites in the campaign and demanded an apology from Berlin. The whole affair endangered the new friendship between Poland and Germany, and probably this was not mourned by the other nations of Europe.

Paul Goebbels

WITH the rubber workers in the tire plants of Akron, Ohio, ready to quit their jobs, the American Federation of Labor pledged itself to finance the strike, which President Green declared would be a crucial attempt by organized labor to force on industry the collective bargaining provisions of the NRA. He announced his organization would "support the rubber workers of Akron for as long a time as may be necessary."

Green definitely marked out the tire strike as a test of labor's ability to make good on the promises held out to it by the New Deal. The national labor relations board, he pointed out, had ordered the big tire companies, Goodyear, Goodrich, and Firestone, to allow their workers to elect representatives for collective bargaining. The companies have refused and labor now takes into its own hands the enforcement of the NLRB decision, Green argued.

Tire manufacturers, on the other side, recognize the threatened strike as a key move in the New Deal program for regimentation of labor and industry and are fighting back. Firestone expected to go before the District of Columbia Supreme court and ask a permanent injunction against the NLRB and NRA meddling in its labor situation.

FOLLOWING the example set by Hitler, Austria has decided to disregard the limitations on its military strength set by the treaty of St. Germain and to increase its armed forces immediately. The official communique issued by Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg did not say how big the army would be or whether conscription would be restored. The annual spring parade of the army at the Ringstrasse in Vienna was revived, and the troops appeared in fine new uniforms.

HIS health broken down by his strenuous tour of European capitals to induce the various nations to line up with Great Britain's peace plan, Captain Anthony Eden has been sent to bed by his physicians for some weeks. This is disconcerting to Sir John Simon and the other statesmen, for they are deprived of the company of the young lord privy seal at the tri-power conference at Stresa, Italy, in which Britain, France and Italy hope to agree on a security system for the continent. Eden was not able to make a personal report on his trip at the cabinet meeting but did tell Simon in detail what he had learned. Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald was directed by the cabinet to accompany Sir John to the Stresa conference when word was received that Premier Flandin of France and Premier Mussolini of Italy would be there. The great music hall in the Villa Borromeo on Isola Bella, half a mile out in Lake Maggiore was prepared for the statesmen, and they were to be completely isolated there with their experts and secretaries, no one else being allowed to approach the island.

Captain Eden

Important decisions regarding Britain's scheme for a general collective security system for Europe, the league's attitude toward German rearmament, the proposed revision of treaties affecting Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria, and the possibility of getting Germany to return to the league were expected to be made at Stresa.

SOVIET RUSSIA is still pressing Foreign Minister Laval of France to conclude a military alliance between these two countries, but Laval holds off, proposing instead the European security pact which would include Russia but would not be drawn up especially for her. Moscow is reported to be greatly vexed and it is said in Paris that French communists have been instructed by the Third Internationale to stir up all the trouble they can in order to coerce the government, reminding it that Russia, whenever it pleases, can disrupt France's defensive preparations and even bring on a civil war. Communists in France are so numerous and so influential that this may be no idle threat.

OUR minister to Canada, Warren Delano Robbins, succumbed to pneumonia in a New York hospital after a week's illness. He was a first cousin of President Roosevelt and had been in the diplomatic service for more than 25 years, being one of the most distinguished of the "career" men. Adolph S. Ochs, veteran owner and publisher of the New York Times, was stricken with cerebral hemorrhage while visiting old friends in Chattanooga, Tenn., and died without regaining consciousness. He was seventy-seven years old and had been in poor health for some time.

Another notable man taken by death was Edwin Arlington Robinson, generally considered the foremost American poet. He won the Pulitzer prize for poetry in 1922, 1926 and 1928.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by the State department that the United States has accepted in general terms the proposal of Argentina and Chile for co-operative efforts to end the Bolivia-Paraguay war in the Gran Chaco. KANG TEH, emperor of Manchukuo, is the first foreign ruler ever to visit Tokyo, and he has been received with the greatest honors by Emperor Hirohito. Washington.—It appears that at last all of those questions as to whether the national industrial recovery act is constitutional are going to be answered by the Supreme court of the United States. That is, they will be answered by a Supreme court decision unless the moving spirits in NRA decide again to dodge the issue as they once have done.

NRA Up to Supreme Court

Sometime ago W. E. Belcher, an Alabama lumberman, ran afoul of a national recovery administration code ruling and he was promptly prosecuted. Lower courts decided adversely to the government, however, and the NRA lawyers decided to appeal. They wanted a Supreme court decision. But before the case reached the stage of argument before the highest court in the land, the Department of Justice suddenly withdrew the petition and announced its refusal to prosecute Mr. Belcher any further.

There immediately was set up a far-flung cry accusing the NRA and the Department of Justice of being afraid of a constitutional test. Legal brains of the Department of Justice stood pat and offered no explanation, but NRA brain trusters let it be known that they preferred to avoid a test at this time because of the imminent expiration of the industrial recovery act. They pointed out that the law expires June 16 and that congress is now engaged in consideration of a revision. The implication was that the NRA believed a test in the Belcher case was a waste of time and money because of the probability that a Supreme court decision would not be handed down until after the present law was no longer operative.

Now, however, the NRA authorities think they have found the right kind of a case for a constitutional test. They have announced they will fight to have the act declared constitutional in a case in which the Schechter Live Poultry market of Brooklyn, N. Y., is accused of violating the poultry code. So instead of trying out the constitutional question on boards, the brain trusters are seeking a decision on the hen.

The whole situation is regarded by observers as being much confused and no one seems to know exactly what is behind the sudden reversal of position on the part of NRA and the Department of Justice lawyers except a good many folks think the NRA could not stand the gaff of countrywide editorial criticism. It is true that after abandonment of the Belcher case was announced, nearly every important metropolitan newspaper in the country printed editorial comment about the action and little of it was favorable to the NRA. Examined from this viewpoint then, there are some who believe the administration was goaded into a constitutional test of NRA.

Politically, the Department of Justice's determination to avoid a test in the Belcher case already is having repercussions. Barbs and backbiting are coming not alone from Republican antagonists but from among Democrats in congress as well. Senator Hastings, a Delaware Republican, and Senator Clark, a Missouri Democrat, joined in an effort to have Attorney General Cummings reverse his position and urged upon the head of the Department of Justice the necessity for clarification of legal questions involved. The administration's position also has drawn fire from Republican Leader Snell in the house and there are in that body also certain of the so-called progressives who have charged that President Roosevelt is unwilling to face the music in the Belcher case.

Economically, the decision to refrain from pressing the Belcher case for final adjudication by the Supreme court has caused a wave of uncertainty to permeate the business structure.

What the end is going to be, even Donald Richberg, number one man in NRA, has avoided saying. Since he has not enunciated policies his subordinates are afraid to move. Consequently, according to some of the letters now going out from the NRA to business interests, the whole question of codes and their enforcement frankly can be said to be up in the air.

If the NRA can be said to be up in the air, the agricultural adjustment administration can be said to be a rudderless ship. There is no longer any doubt that AAA policy is confused, not to say floundering about in helpless fashion. It has reached the stage where delegations and individuals are arriving in increasing numbers to wait on the doorstep of Secretary Wallace and Administrator Davis for advice as to what the program is.

AAA in Trouble

It ought to be said just here that Mr. Wallace and Mr. Davis are showing signs of irritation and that is always significant. It was only the other day that a group of farm organization leaders came in to Washington to tell Mr. Wallace how the Department of Agriculture must do something to enable farmers in the areas that were drouth stricken to plant crops. They pointed out the necessity for quick action because crops must be planted within the next few weeks. They did not stop there, however, but added points of criticism about AAA policy. This so irked Mr. Wallace that he announced abruptly that the interview was closed.

The secretary was quoted by members of the delegation as having inquired whether the Roosevelt administration had not done more for farmers than any previous administration. He was reported also to have said he did not like the attitude or the spirit which the visitors displayed in their conversations with him. The result was that the farm leaders went away from the vast building housing the Department of Agriculture with a decidedly bad taste in their mouths and the prediction is heard frequently now that these men will cause much trouble for Mr. Wallace hereafter by telling their stories among the home folks.

I think it is generally conceded that economical and political numskulls may be found in positions of responsibility among farm organizations but after all they serve as something of a leadership for groups that speak for agriculture and when Mr. Wallace becomes angered by their criticism of his administration, serious trouble for him lies not so far ahead. Such circumstances as the one just mentioned usually are accepted as indicating a thin skin on the part of a public official and that condition is nearly always fatal—if ruined Herbert Hoover.

Around the halls of congress, also, there is increasing criticism of Mr. Wallace and it is of a character to undermine him if it continues. When such stalwart Democrats as Senator George of Georgia describes a cabinet officer as being unfit for the office he holds, the situation as regards that individual necessarily becomes precarious.

Criticise Wallace

The controversies that are centering around Secretary Wallace naturally are having their reaction on his legislative proposals. It is my understanding that considerable difficulty is faced by the amendments to the adjustment act which the secretary desires to have passed at this session of congress. These amendments are described by the secretary as being designed to strengthen the adjustment act and accord the AAA more power in enforcement. It seems, however, a certain bloc in congress holds the conviction that there is already sufficient power in Mr. Wallace's hands and those members are growing resentful toward proposals delegating more authority to him.

The recent house-cleaning which resulted in elimination of certain of the brain trusters in the Department of Agriculture and its stepchild, the AAA, had a wholesome effect on relationship between the Department of Agriculture and congress as a whole, yet in some quarters it appears, the house-cleaning did not remove all of the stigma with which oppositionists have stained the administration's farm policies.

With reference to the house-cleaning, it should be said just here that another move is in the making. Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, the present undersecretary of agriculture, is slated to be dehorned insofar as farm recovery policies are concerned. When President Roosevelt gets his hands on the five billion voted in the public works relief bill, Professor Tugwell will be given charge of something like nine hundred millions to spend in a way that is variously described as "scientific." His job will be to sort out lands that are productive from those that are mediocre or without value at all in agriculture and to find uses for those which should not be used as farm lands.

I believe it is not too much to say that conditions in the NRA and AAA have added to the general uncertainty concerning the political and economic outlook of the administration. In this connection it should be mentioned that the Republicans are showing signs of life. For instance, Republican Leader Snell took a shot at President Roosevelt the other day that indicates a forthcoming deluge of criticism of him personally for the first time since he entered the White House.

"Honeymoon" Is Ended

The volume of mail being received on Capitol Hill tells its story as well. Members of the house and senate are beginning to inquire of each other what their political course should be in view of the type of inquiries that are now being received.

Through many months, the personal charm of the President has seemed to prevent expressions of a critical nature and certainly has held off complaints from the business section of the country. Certainly those who have money invested were not being told about future plans. It seems now, however, that the "honeymoon" for which Mr. Roosevelt asked has ended and that henceforth it will be a battle of realities.

The most direct attack upon the President and upon the New Deal came from Representative James Wadsworth, a New York Republican. Mr. Wadsworth stressed uncertainty. In fact, he called it one of the three or four major "evils" of the administration.

War? Who Knows?
Strange Hanging
How Old Is Graft?
What Are Life and Death?

Lloyd George says there will be no war "this time," but some in Europe do not agree. Mussolini wants France and England to join him in an agreement to suppress any outbreak affecting them.

Arthur Brisbane

France is said to have moved troops for defense to the German frontier, although it is hard to guess what those troops could do. If Germany declared war it would be with planes dropping explosives and poison gas on Paris. No nation at war will sit in trenches for four or five years, now that flying is real.

Britain, going a long way around, wisely, sends a suave statesman, Captain Eden, to Moscow to see Stalin of Russia. The talk, not published, may have been like this:

If England agrees to help you fight Japan, will you help against Germany, in case of need?

A British naval officer cut the throat of a shipmate. In England they hang you for that. When hanging time came, Mrs. Violet Vandercist, prosperous widow, opposed to the death penalty, hired two planes to fly back and forth above the gallows, trailing banners reading, "Stop the death sentence."

While airplanes flew overhead, trucks drove back and forth before the jail, with loud speakers bellowing "Abide With Me."

The man that "killed his comrade sleeping," or however he did it, did not "abide." He went through the trap.

The British believe in discouraging murder, and prompt punishment seems to do it.

Graft and dishonesty are old, as old as human need and cunning. A papyrus written 1,200 years before Christ tells of three men tried for robbing a royal tomb. Egyptian kings were descended from the gods; to rob their tombs was sacrilege, the punishment death.

A dishonest jeweler, putting base metal in a supposedly "pure gold" crown for King Hiero, was exposed by the great Archimedes, who thought out a method in his bath, and started the word "eureka" down through the ages.

Michael Angelo, building St. Peter's at Rome, complained to the pope of the materials furnished by contractors, reminding his holiness that he. Michael Angelo, would make no profit from St. Peter's except "benefit to my soul," and urged the pope to punish the grafters. There is even graft now in this modern, enlightened republic.

What is life? What is death? What are we?

An English gentleman "dies"; doctors pronounce him dead. He returns to life, says he has been in heaven tells what he saw—a dull account clothing the same as we wear here. How far, how fast, did his spirit travel while he was "dead"?

What does the soul do while the body is supposedly dead? Does it go away and come back, or just wait around inside the body? What is death? Some say it is only a "belief," and there is no such thing.

In New York's American Museum of Natural History is shown a drawing of the largest land mammal that ever lived, named Baluchiterium. This huge animal, which vanished from earth 25,000,000 years ago, stood 17 feet 9 inches high at the shoulder, was as big as two big elephants, weighed 20,000 pounds or more. It was not as big as a dinosaur, but the dinosaur laid eggs and was no mammal. A food problem might be solved if the "biggest mammal" could be brought back and raised by cattlemen. It ate 500 pounds of food a day; that must be considered. In America it might be necessary to drown the mammal Baluchiterium, with her unborn babies.

Sir John Simon, returning from an unsatisfactory talk with Hitler, reports "certain divergencies" of opinion. That is going pretty far for a British statesman. There is a bigger fly than that in the ointment: Sir John learns from Hitler that Germany "already has a larger air force than that of Great Britain." Britain thought Germany had only half as many planes. A wise statesman gets his fighting airplanes ready before he starts to fight.

In France three persons "sterilized" at their own request by "a mysterious Austrian doctor" because they did not want to have children have been arrested.

France, striving for more population believes that "sterilization" can be overdone.

The mysterious Austrian performed 15 operations on men and women before disappearing.

"Sweet Bye and Bye" Had Origin in Gloom

The song "In the Sweet Bye and Bye" grew out of one of the composer's frequent fits of gloom, according to Hezekiah Butterworth in his "Story of the Hymns and Tunes."

Joseph Philbrick Webster, who wrote the song, entered the office of Dr. Sanford Filmore Bennett in Elkhorn, Wis., in the year 1867, wearing a melancholy look, and was rallied good naturedly by the doctor for being so blue—the two were friends and the doctor was familiar with the other's frequent periods of melancholia.

Webster and Bennett had been working in a sort of partnership, Webster being a musician and Bennett a ready verse-writer, and together they had created and published a number of sheet music songs. When Webster was in a fit of melancholy it was the doctor's habit to give him a "dose" of new verses and cure him by putting him to work.

"What's the matter now?" was the doctor's greeting when his "patient" came with the tell-tale face.

"Oh, nothing," said Webster. "It'll be all right by and by."

"Why not make a song of the sweet by and by?" rejoined the doctor, cheerfully.

"I don't know," said Webster, after thinking a second or two. "If you'll make the words, I'll write the music." And so the song was born and entered in the Sunday School hymn book, "The Signet Ring," which Bennett and Webster were at work upon.

It had no exceptional result as to its hold on the public until 1873 when Ira D. Sankey took it up as one of his working hymns. That year it appeared, with pianoforte accompaniment and chorus in "Winnowed Hymns," as arranged by Hubert P. Main.

Doctor Bennett was born in 1836, and went to Elkhorn from the West in 1861 to practice his profession. He died in October, 1898. Webster was born in Manchester, N. H., March 22, 1819. He was active as a member of the Handel and Haydn society and various other musical associations. He moved to Elkhorn, Wis., in 1857, where he died January 18, 1875. His "Signet Ring" was published in 1868. —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Long List of Failures to "Aid" Mother Nature

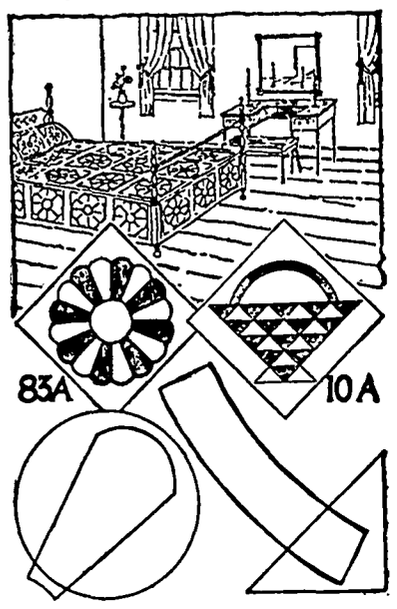
Man's attempts to interfere with nature sometimes produce disastrous results. In Australia rabbits were originally introduced as game, but they are now a serious pest, according to a writer in Pearson's Weekly (London). In this country the gray squirrel, imported 25 years ago from Canada, has now become a considerable menace to young birds and vegetation. Goldfish introduced into Madagascar many years ago to lend a little color to the waterways proceeded to destroy all the edible fresh water fish and then, to make matters worse, abandoned their golden hue and turned a drab gray-green.

At one time, when fishermen discovered that oysters were being destroyed by starfish, they attempted to destroy the starfish by tearing them in two and throwing the pieces back into the water. The pieces promptly developed into fully-grown starfish and so the trouble was doubled.

Nowadays scientists who seek to destroy pests by introducing their natural enemies to attack them are cautious in their experiments, lest the remedy should eventually prove worse than the disease.

CUTTING PATCHES FOR QUILTS

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



When making a patch quilt the patches must be cut out right if the finished quilt is to look neat. Sewing seams the same width is also very important. These two points should always be watched as work progresses, to obtain good results, and not have trouble after work is well under way. Cut the patches from accurate cut-out diagrams. The cut-out diagrams shown here are a set for the "Dresden Plate" and "Basket" quilts, and include allowance for seams. Any width for seams may be used but always use the same width in one quilt, to come out right. Directions for use are very simple. Place cut-out on material so the longest dimension follows the weave. Mark outline with pencil and cut out material carefully.

Send 10 cents to our quilt dept. and we mail you both of these fiber cut-outs set No. 83a and 10a.

Creamed Peas and Salmon

A favorite salmon recipe in the houses and dormitories at Iowa State College is:

Use one No. 2 can of peas and a pound can of salmon. Drain the peas, flake the salmon, remove the bones and skin, and add a tablespoonful of lemon juice. Make a white sauce and cook until thickened. Stir in the peas and salmon, and when hot, serve on slices of crisp toast.

YOUR CHILD AND THE SCHOOL

By Dr. ALLEN G. HEALAND
Director, Physical and Health Education
New Jersey State Department of Public Instruction

The Spring Play Day

It's time to be planning the ...ring play day. Give thought to ...aking it a happy, joyous occasion. To do that, provide some activity or job for every child. No one likes to be left out. If one can't run, play, or dance, he can serve in some useful capacity.

A large share of the planning should fall to the pupils. Let them organize committees and hold regular meetings with discussions of program, costumes, picnic luncheon and so on. Play up the health factor, for this is opportunity. Talk about training through observance of the health rules. And give a prominent place to sportsmanship, for these occasions are truly laboratories of citizenship.

For the program, stress the dances and the simple games and stunts dear to children. This calls for minimizing the old type of athletic field day, but in the end you will be more content.

What about the boy who is called a sissy? Dr. Ireland will tell parents how to deal with him next week.

TESTS SHOW SOME OLD CORN BETTER THAN NEW CROP

Good 2-year old seed corn is superior to some 1934 seed, tests conducted by the Farm Crops Department at Iowa State College show. Even though last year's crop consisted mainly of small ears, the seed can be safely used if it gives good germination.

Fortunately plenty of good seed corn is available in Iowa this spring. Where the drouth was exrteme, many cribs of 1933 corn are to be found. Seed should be purchased locally because it is more likely to be adaptable and the price lower.

Although the AAA has taken options on many crips of sealed corn, the government is not expected to buy and resell any of this corn. Whenever the owners arrange to sell this corn for seed, the government will release its option.

SHOULD DUST SEED CORN, TESTS AT COLLEGE SHOW

The reduced supply of seed corn for 1935 makes seed treatment very desirable this spring, in the opinion of R. H. Porter, director of the seed laboratory at Iowa State College.

Tests conducted by Mr. Porter in the laboratory show that seed corn diseases are generally prevalent. The 1933 crop is affected as well as last year's crop. Experiments have proved that treatment of seed corn with any of the recommended dusts will prevent seedling blight and thereby increase both stand and yield.

CLUSTER BUD SPRAY TIME WILL SOON BE HERE

Time for applying the Cluster Bud spray which is usually applied just before the apple trees break into bloom, according to S. J. Oberhauser, county agent. Many growers however, will omit the spray this year due to the fact that last season's drouth practically eliminated apple scab, the disease at which this particuular spray is mainly aimed.

Those growers who did not observe any scab on the fruit or leaves of their apple trees last year can feel quite safe in omitting this spray this season. This would be particularly true, in practically all but in the eastern counties of the state. Orchards in that section should receive the cluster bud spray.

Food of the right kind is the cheapest health insurance that can be purchased for the child, suggests Dr. P. Mabel Nelson, head of the Foods and Nutrition department at Iowa State College, Ames.

"IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE" SAYS ART

Art Wellemeyer is a firm believer in the "power of the press" and says, "Tell the world The Klemme Times gets results."

A short time ago Art advertised in the Times for some German phonograph records that had become lost. Art says all but one are now back in the store.

However the joke is on Art. After worrying around, writing up and running an ad, and waiting for results—he found them—when cleaning up a corner in his store.

But Art still says "It Pays To Advertise."

Students Home For Easter

Klemme young people who attend college and who were home for Easter were Lavohn Larsen, Wilbur Arnold and Nellie Stromer from Ames; Novella Bredbenner, of Cedar Falls; and Gracka Quandt Dorance Day and Byrnes Missman, from Iowa City. Gladys Zabilka, a senior in the Fort Dodge high school, spent the week end in Klemme with her parents.

A short quiet period should intervene between the hard day's play of the child and going to bed. At this season, children are likely to play out of doors after the evening meal and come in from too active play to bed, suggests Miss Lydia V. Swanson, of the child development department at Iowa State College.

When De Wolf Hopper, one of America's best known and best loved actors celebrated his seventy-seventh birthday, the Kansas City Philharmonic orchestra, with which he had been working in a broadcast, surprised him with a party and a cake weighing 50 pounds. In the illustration City Manager H. F. McElroy is seen handing Mr. Hopper the knife to carve the cake.

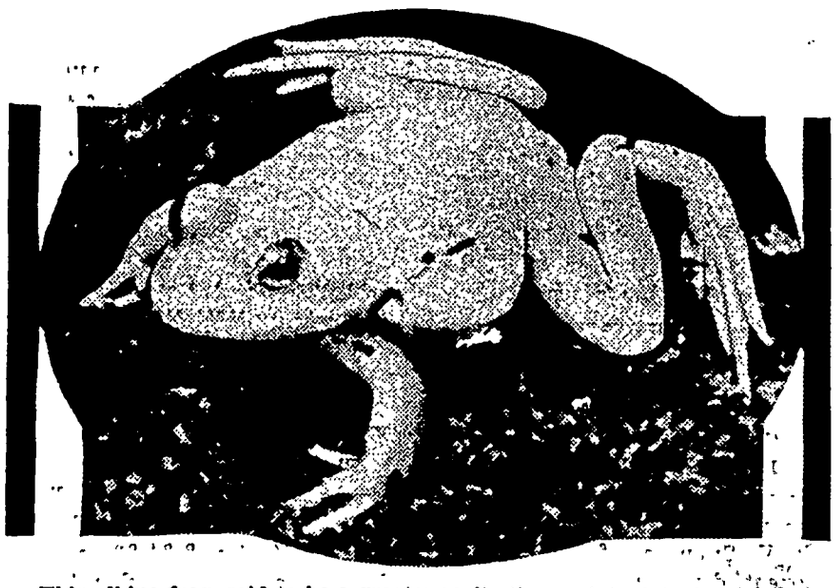
American Museum Has Albino Frog



This albino frog, said to be a greater rarity than quintuplets, is being raised at the American Museum of Natural History in New York. It was found on a farm in St. Lawrence county, New York, and is now the charge of Dr. G. Kingsley Noble, curator of herpetology. The frog should be brownish green in color but by a freak of nature it is saffron hued, almost white.

No Smallpox in Europe

Smallpox has practically vanished from continental Europe, except in Russia and Spain, the conquest of the disease being attributed to compulsory vaccination.

More Than Mere Beauty Found in the Diamond

Not all diamonds are sold as jewels. Fully one-half of those which are mined are not quite good enough, but there is a market for them just the same. As the hardest stone on earth, the diamond is exceedingly useful for a great many industrial purposes.

Do you smoke a pipe or use a fountain pen? The vulcanite of the pipestem or the pen has to be polished, and the pen has to be finished off with a pattern of little lines. Diamonds are used to perform these jobs.

They are also employed in the making of spectacles and eyeglasses, and in the manufacture of small engine parts for motor cars. And the filament wires of our electric globes are drawn through tiny plates set with diamond dust.

But though diamonds are hard—far harder than any other stone—they are fragile, too. They are inclined to be brittle, and the slightest fall may injure them. Another of their peculiarities is that they are phosphorescent. After they have been exposed to brilliant light they give back the rays they have received and become self-luminous in the dark.

FUTURE AIRSHIPS

Airplanes of the future will resemble winged rockets, according to M. Louis Breguet, the French airplane constructor. The fast commercial planes, he says, will have a heavy wing, loading 20 to 30 pounds per square foot, means for increasing the lift considerably, air and ground brakes, and powerful and light engines moderately supercharged. There will be a frequent use of altitudes of flights not exceeding 13,000 feet. The machine also will have comfortable cabins heated, and when necessary, supplied with oxygen.

EE POWERS IN A UNITED RONT AGAINST GERMANY; BOOM FOR McCARL.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

of Europe's foremost statesmen, ith experts and secretaries, sol- y considered peace plans and se- y pacts on Isola Bella, a lovely little island in Lake Maggiore off Stresa, Italy. The conference was momentous, but it was of an "exploratory" nature, and no definite results were expected. Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon, representing Great Britain, were willing to carry out that nation's military obliga- under the Locarno treaty but ed at further commitment in con- ntal affairs. Anyhow, they had nised to enter into no new agree- ts without the consent of parlia- t, which cannot be consulted until the Easter holidays. Premier din and Foreign Minister Laval rance sought to persuade England ine up with France and Russia er than with Germany, and they ented as one argument a new mu- assistance pact they had just ed with Russia. Premier Mus- l, solemn and pessimistic, han- matters for Italy with the help of lo Suvich, undersecretary of for- affairs. He had already warned world that the issue of war or ce probably could not be settled at sa.

Premier Flandin

f course, the chief question was the tude of other nations toward the tantly growing Pan-Germanism of reich under Hitler, and the first crete problem taken up was nce's appeal to the League of Na- s against Germany's repudiation of military clauses of the Versailles ty.

remiers Mussolini and Mac Donald suaded Flandin to moderate the e of this protest and not to demand specific penalty against Germany, then all approved the note and in solution slapped Hitler on the wrist halting the progress toward arms itation.

The three premiers also agreed that ir nations should act in concert in moting an Eastern Locarno, strengthing the position of Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria, proceeding with the otiation of an air convention, opposing unilateral repudiation of treaand calling a Danubian confere in May.

rance's memorandum as submitted he League of Nations council when ssembled in Geneva was still a vigously worded document, characterizHitler's military moves as "the mination of long and methodical ors pursued in secret." The ac- , it said, "has deliberately deoyed one of the bases" of Gery's collaboration with the league. so doing it has seriously comomised the success of international otiations on limitation of armaents pursued under the auspices of League of Nations and on the is of article VIII of the league venant," the memorandum continued.

Foreign Minister Laval, who preted the memorandum, recommended t Germany be "condemned" for her tion, and that the league consider nomic penalties against nations ich, in the future, violate treaties.

Berlin came back at the memoran- m with an official communique ich said:

"If France believes it is necessary recall the obligations forced on Gerny one need only to recall France's emn and voluntary obligations in Locarno protocol to take immedie steps toward disarmament.

"The statements of the French minters for years revealed that France ver seriously intended to carry out e disarmament obligations."

Actually, the Stresa conference reited in little more than a demonstran of the continued solidarity of the ree great powers participating. This s in a considerable measure a umph for Mussolini, who had exected nothing more, but had insisted the united front.

THE new mutual assistance agreement reached by France and Russia as at first supposed to be merely an greement on sanctions to be taken ainst an aggressor once the latter s been determined by the League of ations. But Paris correspondents asrt that it is in effect a military allince such as Russia had been urging France and that in certain cases the ajorities will determine for themves who is the aggressor without aiting for word from Geneva. The greement is, of course, directed pririly against Germany.

That Russia still seeks "to maintain d strengthen the general peace" was own by the signing of a Russo-Gerin trade treaty which it is believed ill greatly increase the volume of ussia's orders in the reich.

THERE will be no strike at present in the tire plants of Akron, for the bber workers in the Goodyear, Goodich and Firestone factories ratified an greement that was reached in Washington between labor leaders and officials of the three companies brought together by Secretary of Labor Perkins. The pact provides that the companies will meet with representatives of any group of employees for collective bargaining. It also postpones strike action pending final court tests of orders by the national labor board that Goodyear and Firestone should hold immediate elections for representation in collective bargaining.

JUST as soon as the President says the word, the federal bureau of public roads and the various state highway departments are ready to jump into the work of grade crossing elimination, the building of arterial highways and similar projects. The work relief act earmarks $800,000,000 for such undertakings, and the sum may be increased by the President to a billion. The roads bureau already has $100,000,000 of grade crossing eliminations and other projects contracted for under authority granted by congress last year, officials revealed, and these contracts are to be met with work-relief money.

Arthur W. Brandt, president of the American Association of State Highway Officials, advised a congressional committee recently that states were prepared to wipe out 4,058 dangerous crossings if as much as $461,881,500 was made available. He said $277,567,500 of such projects could be completed in a year. Brandt reported also that state officials were ready to begin construction—or widening and straightening—of 1,739 trunk line routes through cities at a cost of $208,732,800.

States will not be required to match the work-relief money set aside for highway, street and crossing construction. After it is made available by the President, the fund will be apportioned among the states.

JOHN R. McCARL, the able, efficient and independent comptroller general of the United States, has annoyed the New Dealers on several occasions.

J. R. McCarl

Now he threatens to block the plans of the AAA for lifting the restrictions on spring wheat planting and at the same time continuing to pay the farmers for crop reductions that would not be called for. Declaring they wished to avoid shortages due to the dust storms, the officials of the AAA said the farmers would be paid for the abandoned reductions in acreage if they would promise to curtail their plantings next year. Mr. McCarl asked for further information on this matter and indicated he could not approve of the plan, though AAA men declared he had not ruled definitely against it. Chester C. Davis, AAA administrator, might not be content to abide by such a ruling if it were made, and the administration might refuse to accept it.

Mr. McCarl, a Republican, holds his office under a law which specifies that the comptroller general shall be appointed to a 15-year term and can be removed only by death or impeachment. Nevertheless Attorney General Cummings, it is understood, gave it as his opinion that, like any other Presidential appointee, he could be removed at the pleasure of the President. He based this opinion on a ruling of the Supreme court in the case of a postmaster who was ousted by President Coolidge, the court holding that the President was within his rights under Article 2 of the Constitution. So it may be the New Dealers will seek to have Mr. McCarl ousted before his term expires in 1936, for it is feared by them that he will hamper the expenditure of the $4,880,000,000 work relief appropriation to an extent that would greatly irk the Democratic party leaders.

It is interesting to read that the Nebraska Progressive league, made up of liberal Republicans, is planning the organization of "McCarl for President" clubs in that state and afterward in all others. George W. Kline, its chairman, says he was asked to support McCarl for President in 1936 by friends of Senator George W. Norris. The comptroller general is a graduate of the University of Nebraska law school and for years was Mr. Norris' secretary.

SEVEN agencies of the government are organizing to combat the damage done by the constantly recurring dust storms. They are the AAA, farm credit administration, emergency relief administration, soil erosion service, bureau of plant industry and bureau of agricultural engineering.

The efforts, officials said, will include shipping feed, food and water into the stricken areas of Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Kansas and Colorado, starting work relief projects on roads, private lands and the public domain, planting of fast-growing and hardy crops as ground cover in areas where moisture conditions permit, and "listing" operations. This latter work is an attempt to prevent soil blowing away, by making alternate ridges and furrows.

Meanwhile other officials of the same bureaus were beginning to map out permanent plans designed, they said, to prevent recurrence of dust storms in dry periods.

Primary among these was a program with the declared aim of permanently acquiring, through the AAA and relief administration, 15,000,000 acres of land before July 1. Such land will be retired from farm production to cover crops and forests and for use as recreation and wild-life areas. The land is classed as submarginal by government experts since it is in a region of small annual rainfall.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT called Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi to the White House for a conference concerning the veterans' bonus bill, which already has passed the house. Harrison is chairman of the senate finance committee and the administration looked to him to devise a way to spike the measure which is so objectionable to the President in its present "greenback" form. Other majority leaders in congress also were busy with the problem, and it was believed a compromise had been found that would solve it. This would be a bill providing full cash payment by 1938 and, meantime, substitution of interest bearing negotiable bonds for the adjusted service certificates due in 1945.

Senator Harrison refused to discuss in detail his conversation with Mr. Roosevelt but expressed hope and confidence that within the next few weeks there would be a settlement of the bonus question satisfactory to all.

ACCUSING the federal government in Washington of maintaining a "dictatorial colonial policy," the legislators of Puerto Rico went on strike, walking out of the capitol at San Juan 30 hours before the session would automatically have ended and leaving unfinished a lot of important legislation. The lawmakers complained especially of methods of carrying on relief and rehabilitation on the island.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by the government that it had uncovered extensive frauds in the immigration and naturalization service from 1923 to 1933, and steps were taken for the ousting of a number of employees and for criminal prosecutions. It was estimated that a ring of bribe takers and fixers had received as much as a million dollars from persons illegally entering the country.

IN HIS first post-vacation conference with congressional leaders, President Roosevelt disregarded their fears of a prolonged session and insisted on enactment of his legislative program. Especially he wants legislation dealing with extension of the NRA, social security, utilities holding companies, extension of federal authority over banking, ship subsidy readjustment and extension of $416,000,000 in nuisance taxes.

Later the President conferred with Senator Joe Robinson, who said both of them felt that very satisfactory progress is being made. To the correspondent Mr. Roosevelt said he hoped to have the work relief program at its peak by the middle of November, at which time 3,500,000 unemployed should be at work under its terms. He indicated this program would be carried out as far as possible by existing governmental agencies. He will seek to avoid moving workers from one area to another, and will take care of as many "white collar" workers as possible.

The social security bill finally was produced on the floor of the house of representatives. There were several blocs against it in its form as reported. These included representatives who want higher unemployment and old age payments; members from the poorer states, who want the federal government to bear the entire cost of the program, with the states relieved of any contribution, and the conservatives, who are opposed to the "government going into the insurance business" and exacting a pay roll tax during the depression.

SIR OSWALD MOSLEY, chief of the British Fascists, has committed his organization to a policy of anti-semitism fully as severe as that of the Hitler Nazis. At a riotous meeting of his Black Shirts in Leicester, Mosley said: "For the first time I openly and publicly challenge Jewish interests in this country. Commanding commerce, commanding the press, commanding the cinema, dominating the city of London, they are killing industry with their sweatshops. These great interests are not intimidating and will not intimidate the Fascist movement of the modern age."

Sir Oswald Mosley

Leaders of more than 200 of Chicago's 300 Jewish organizations assembled to indorse the campaign of the American Jewish congress for consolidation of all organized Jewish action. The chief speaker was the famous Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, national president and founder of the congress. In the course of his address he said:

"I want the day to come when no Jew shall live in Germany—not one. I want the day to come—although I shall not live to see it—when the Jew will be a regretted memory in Germany, just as their presence was a blessing and an ennoblement in every sense."

WILEY POST is having nothing but bad luck in his attempts to fly across the continent in the stratosphere in record-breaking time. On his third try, starting from Burbank, Calif., he got as far as Lafayette, Ind., there his supercharger went wrong. So the famous Winnie Mae came down at Purdue university airport eight hours twelve and one-half minutes after it left the west coast. Post was uncertain of his plans for the future.

Adolph S. Ochs
Russia's New Plane
Superstition and Suicide
Cocktail Parties

The death of Adolph S. Ochs, editor and owner of the New York Times, is a great loss to American journalism and good citizenship. Mr. Ochs was a good American, whose life and work set an admirable example to his profession.

Arthur Brisbane

All his life a hard-worker, conscientious, indifferent to personal profit, Mr. Ochs often put to this writer and other friends the question, ever in his mind, "How can I make of the Times a permanent and useful institution?"

Russia, according to Lloyd George, is the world's real flying nation, possesses, probably, the world's greatest fighting air fleet. It is certainly the country that takes flying most seriously, with 8,000,000 Russians trained in aeronautics, young Russian girls learning to pilot planes and dirigibles and make 20,000-foot parachute jumps, as our young girls learn new dance steps.

This makes important Russia's announcement that she is manufacturing airplanes on a mass production basis, using for air power "an ordinary light automobile engine." The planes, very cheap, using ordinary gasoline, will be supplied to collective farms. Russia may be the first nation to do with flying machines what this country did with automobiles. American genius put this nation on wheels. If Russian engineering skill puts Russia on wings, it will make some other countries thoughtful.

A young man is found strangely murdered, or committing suicide in an unusual way, hanging from a low tree. His legs were fastened behind his back with chains, chains were around his hands and neck, and a medal that he had won in an athletic contest was fastened with a safety pin to one of his nostrils. The man, thirty-one, who had been employed in moving pictures as a substitute for actors under dangerous conditions, is believed by police to have killed himself in a strange way, through vanity, to attract attention, climbing to the limb of a tree, adjusting the chain, dropping and strangling.

Police quote a superstition of certain Malays who believe that evil spirits carry off their souls if they kill themselves. When they commit suicide they exhaust their ingenuity in efforts to die in such a fashion as to make suicide seem impossible, that the spirits after inspection may decide that the dead man was murdered and leave his soul in peace.

During prohibition, the habit of drunkenness was acquired by many, particularly young women. They yield more easily than men to the effects of alcohol and drugs, and once "caught" they are caught for life, usually.

American fathers and mothers that give cocktail parties for their sons and daughters, or permit them in their houses, should be told plainly that they are using their money to make drunkards of the daughters and sons, and are not fit to have, or bring up, children.

In addition to moving 60,000 more soldiers to the German lines, France is hurriedly connecting her steel and concrete line of fortresses, with barbed wire entanglements and trenches. Thirty thousand soldiers are digging in as you read.

The French apparently expect the same old thing over again, but they will not see it. Nations in the next war will not squat in trenches, but will fly against the enemy nation's chief cities and kill an impressive number of citizens with poison explosives and gas.

Nothing will be more lonesome than a front line trench in the next war.

Harlem, in upper New York city, with some 200,000 colored population, is stamping ground for many that preach ultra-radical doctrines, including the theory that whoever has money must have stolen it from those that have no money.

This added to race antagonism, and the influence of certain "exhorters," brings results reminding citizens of what may happen when dangerous doctrines are preached recklessly.

The latest news indicates that Chancellor Hitler is not as anxious for "war in a hurry" as was alleged.

Sir John Simon, for England, received from Hitler a written proposal:

First, a ten-year nonaggression treaty with Germany's neighbors, nobody to attack anybody else.

Second, a pledge to withhold economic and financial assistance from any nation starting a war.

Hitler wrote that, and, if he means it, Lloyd George is correct in his statement: "Not this time."

ROMAN STADIUM MODEL FOR ALL

Coliseum the Last Word in Athletic "Plants."

The last word in stadium construction was spoken many years ago. It isn't the Rose Bowl or Olympic stadium in Los Angeles, but an arena 200 feet high with an external circumference of 1,900 feet.

It was begun 72 years after the birth of Christ. It was called the Flavian amphitheater and later the Coliseum. It held more than 85,000 persons and could be emptied in ten minutes.

Built a little less than 1,900 years ago, it lacked no comfort or convenience of a modern football stadium.

The Chicago stadium and Madison Square garden are marvels of modern engineering skill and amusement building construction! They are just about fair. About the only thing they have that the Romans didn't have are ice-making machines. And had there been any ice sports in those days, or had Italy had a colder climate, the Romans would have had the machines, too.

After all, you visit the Palatine rooms, dressing rooms, showers, dens for wild animals, runways for them, prisons for the condemned criminals and Christians and storerooms for the vast collection of properties used in the shows.

The arena also could be flooded and used as a swimming pool. Remember how tickled the late Tex Rickard was when he managed to do that in the old Madison Square garden. I don't even know whether it can be done in the present New York garden. And the only outdoor stadium I know of that can be used for swimming is the Rose Bowl in Pasadena. I saw that one under water.

Ever been in the garden during the circus and wondered what would happen if Clyde Beatty's beasts should suddenly knock down those flimsy looking cages and start running amuck in the arena and leap into the boxes?

The Romans thought of that one, too.

A railing ran around the inside of the amphitheater. All around the top bars of the rail were revolving cylinders, so that the wild beasts couldn't get a foothold. When they leaped for the rails, as they often did, the cylinders spun on the bar and they slid off.

You may still see the locker rooms, conveniently placed just outside the arena, where the gladiators changed clothing and donned their armor to prepare for the show, sometimes behind silk curtains drawn across the little cells in the walls of which were stuck flambeaux to give light. No doubt the names of the heroes were embroidered on the silk curtains.—Paul Gallico, in the Kansas City Times.

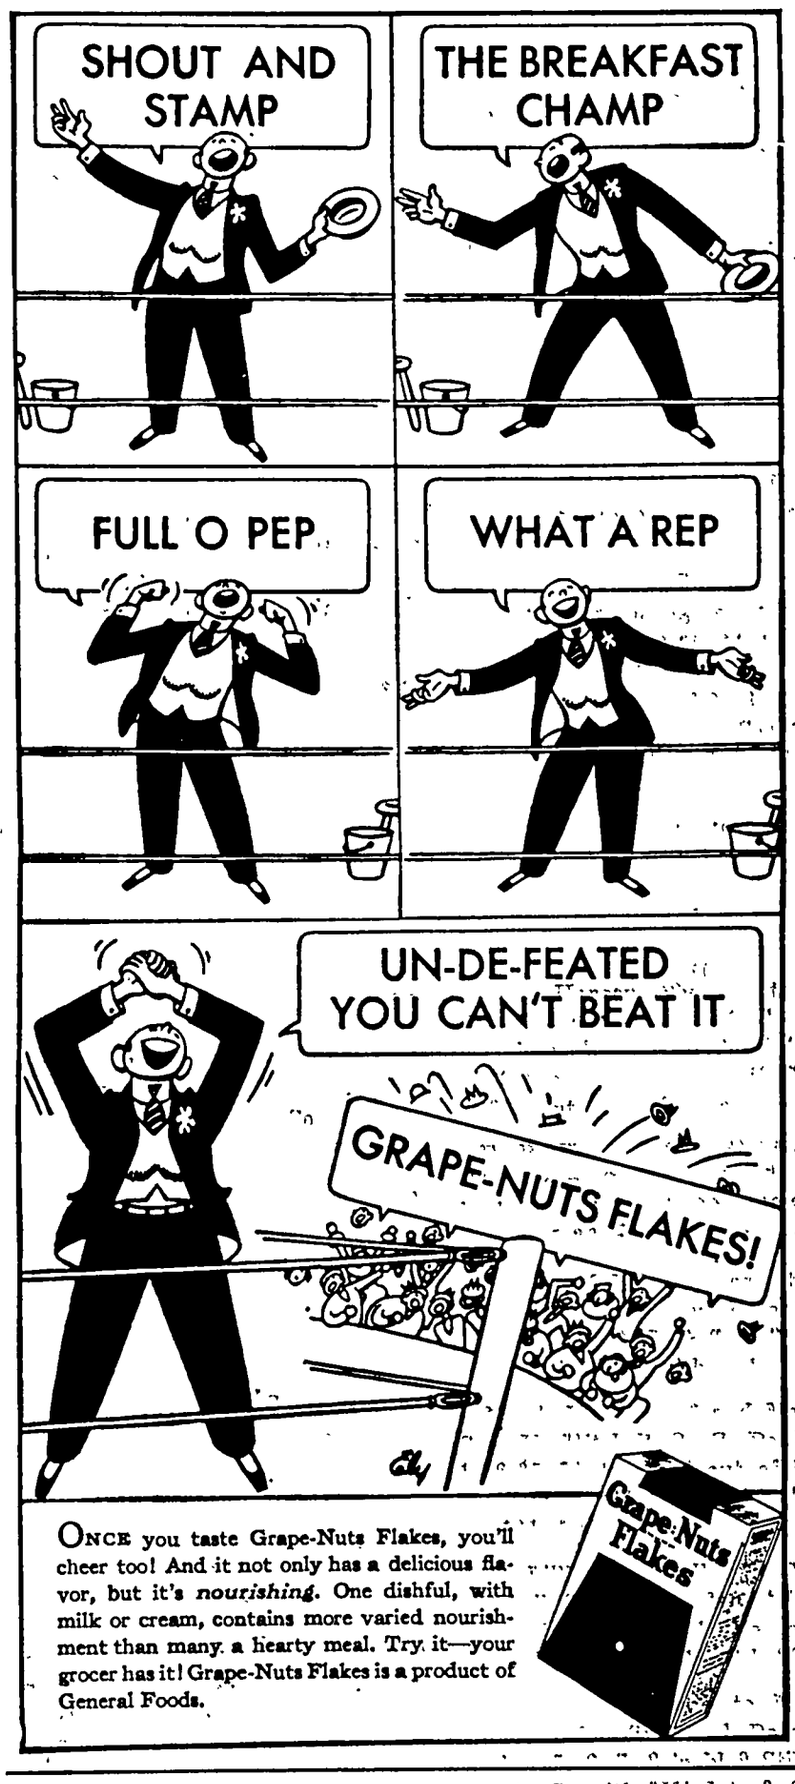

ONCE you taste Grape-Nuts Flakes, you'll cheer too! And it not only has a delicious flavor, but it's nourishing. One dishful, with milk or cream, contains more varied nourishment than many a hearty meal. Try it—your grocer has it! Grape-Nuts Flakes is a product of General Foods.

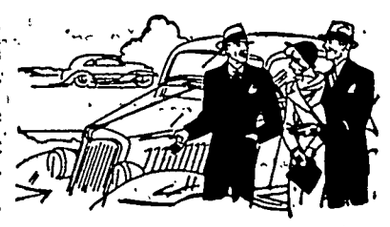
Beauty that won't WEAR OFF!

When you Simoniz your car, you can be positive—yes, absolutely sure that it will stay beautiful. What's more, Simoniz protects the finish and makes it last longer. Perhaps, however, your car is already dull. Then first use the new, improved Simoniz Kleener. It brings back all the lustre and beauty your car had when new. So always insist on Simoniz and Simoniz Kleener. Besides being easier to apply, they cost no more than polishes and so-called waxes that give but a here-today-and-gone-tomorrow shine.



Simoniz and Simoniz Kleener are sold by hardware and auto accessory dealers, filling stations and garages everywhere.

Klemme High School Squealer

Bessie Larson, editor; Milvern Barz, ass't editor; Franklin Kluckhohn, sports; Carmen Kluckhohn, features; Reporters, Ruth and Nora Well meyer, Lavonne Sherwood Raymond Jorgenson.

SHAMROCK BLARNEY

The frehman class have furnished the material for the High School Squealer this week. Buster Jorgenson was elected editor and Paul Schuldt, assistant editor. Other members of the class helped collect the material for the paper.

The domestic science girls have now finished their first sewing projects and will soon begin another. The next they are about to make is dresses.

The seniors have been kept busy this week exchanging autographs in their spare time as Mr. Hamilton of Mason City has sent hem each a memory book in which they may keep autographs of their classmates incidents and happenings of high school days and memories of commencemene and baccalaureate. These little books will make nice keepsakes and the seniors appreciate them very much.

Dr. F. D. Crab of Iowa State Teachers college has accompanied Mr. Baggs in doing extension work this week in the county. Dr. Crab gave a very interesting talk on the use of the dictionary in the grade rooms.

The senior class is going to make a short study of grammar as soon as the material in their text books is finished.

The school again had a short vaction last Friday. It gave the teachers an excellent chance to get home early before Easter. Also the stu dents were glad.

The senior class play "Sound Your Horn" will be given May 3rd and 4th.

The manual training boys are all busy and they are making various things. Some of the things are hall trees, lamps, magazine racks, and tie racks. We are all proud of the things we have made and wish we could take this subject again some other year.

Franklin Kluckhohn spoke his declamatory selection at the meeting of the Women's Club if Garner last Monday afternoon. Miss Barz and Lyndon Kilgore accompanied him. The meeting was held at the home of Mrs. George Hejlik. They were invited to lunch after the meeting.

WISHES

If all wishes were granted ,we probably would have everything we wanted, but still we would be dissatisfied and unhappy. We also wouldn't know what to wish for next. Everybody would wish something different and it would be impossible for all kinds of wishes on the same thing to be fulfilled. Some would wish it would rain, some wish it would snow and the others would wish the sun would shine. If our world were governed by wishes it would not be suitable for anyone to live in. Nature now governs things better than anyone could by wishes.—Doris Barz.

The Disadvantages of High School

The greatest and most awful disadvantage of high school is the fact that we don't have recess. The grades play ball every recess and sometimes I wish I would have flunked the eighth grade so I could be out there playing with them. The seventh and eighth grades play softball every day and it is a terrible temptation not to keep looking out the window and watch them. Our teacher sometimes gets angry with us because we look out of the window and do not pay attention to the lesson. One other disadvantage which is not so bad is the fact that you do not have a study period right before each class. Of course this isn't bad if you take your books home and study like a good boy. —Paul Schuldt.

THE ART OF KILLING TIME

Of course, I do not like to work when I see the other children outside playing. I like to watch them play ball when I am supposed to be working. I sometimes look at book with one eye and outside with the other so the teacher cannot tell whether I am looking at my book or outside. Sometimes I think she is looking at me so I put both eyes on the book. I would like to whisper or giggle if a person didn't have to stay after school. It is not much fun then. Punishment goes with such fun, so we all have to be satisfied. —Avis Barz.

EDITORIAL

The school days of this year are about gone. As we look back over them, they bring back memories of some good times. As a whole, school was lots of fun along with the work. The parties and programs were all fun, and the classes in school were not so bad.

The days left this year are small in number, about twenty-five left. There are many things coming like parties, plays, graduation, commencement and many other things. This time of the year passes more quickly than winter, and is a lot nicer. Last of all comes the big school picnic. The school days are then over until we meet again next year.—Buster Jorgenson.

INQUIRING REPORTER

What Kind Of A School Party Do You Like Best?

On a nice, light, quiet evening there is nothing better for a school party than a weiner roast. After the weiners are eaten evryone will feel full of pep and ready for a good time. There are always a number of games to play when you have a large space to play in and when all the gang feel like playing. —Novella Beier.

I would like a roller skating party. Everybody would get a good chance to roller skate , and the people that don't know how could learn. You could have a good time because you would know all the people on the floor.—Elmer Trampel

The school party I like best is a skating party. It is lots of fun to go to Bayside and roller skate until six and then skate again after supper until ten at night. This is more fun than a hiking party out in the country, I think.—Juanita Pavey.

I believe I like an initiation party best, if it is a good one. When that kind of party is being put on they should be mean. That is not too mean to kill them or anything like that, but just so they have to do everything they don't like to do. I like it best because it only happens to you once when your in high school.—Elaine Buntenbach.

If You Could Do Anything You Pleased For One Day, What Would You Do?

Well, that's a hard question to answer, but the first thing I'd want would be to have Mother Nature create a perfect day. I would sleep until nine o'clock and then eat a breakfast of Jack Armstrong's "Wheaties." Then I would dress in riding clothes, and get a good riding horse—one with plenty of speed, power and dash—and I would start for Mason City. After I got there, I would do some shopping in the 5, 10 and 25c store and then after enjoying a good show, like "Little Men," "Little Colonel," or "David Copperfield," I'd start for Goodell so I'd be just in time for two or three hours of roller skating which I'd enjoy very much. After the exciting evening, I'd saddle my horse and start for home. Well, I hope everyone knows by this time that my horse would be a New Chevrolet 1935 car, and the riding clothes would be a sport dress.—Violet Schaefer.

I think I would go up to Minnesota and fish in one of the big lakes. If I caught any, I would cook them for my dinner. In the afternoon I would go to India, borrow an elephant, and go tiger hunting. If I got any tigers, I would skin them and use them for rugs. About four o'clock I would go to Africa. I would go hunting lions, not to kill, but to bring back alive for a circus. I would leave Africa about six o'clock and go hunting whales until bed time and this is my idea of doing what I pleased for a day.—Glenn Lewis.

If I would have all the money that I wanted to have and it would be a nice spring day, I would enjoy myself as much as possible. I would walk down the road until I came to a hamburger stand. I would stop and get a hamburger. If I had enough money, I would buy a new car and then go places. I would buy myself some new clothes and get everything I wanted to get and then come back home. After I would be home, I do not think I would be satisfied and would be just as dissatisfied as before. I think that a person is more happy when he doesn't have so much money.—Avis Barz.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—The true purpose of the investigation by the senate munitions committee appears to have come to light. It is seeking the honor of drafting legislation which will give it a historical standing as the group of men who first moved to remove the incentive of profit as provocative of war. In presenting its proposal to this end, however, the committee is regarded as having "started something" which it is unlikely can be finished by the group of individual senators making up that committee.

Light on Nye Inquiry

When the investigating resolution was adopted by the senate, its sponsors made much fuss about conditions in the munitions industry. There were many speeches made by Senator Nye (Rep., N. D.) concerning the wickedness of munitions manufacturers, and in the course of those speeches, which were made in a score of different communities, Senator Nye announced conclusions which apparently have not been supported by evidence adduced by the committee investigators. Further, the senator announced plans to disclose alleged corruption among the munitions manufacturers and stated definitely that the purpose of the inquiry was to provide the basis for laws which would control them.

Now, after seven months, we look back on the committee's record and find that it has played a game of hop-skip-and-jump from one subject to another and, I believe, the consensus is that little of real value either to the senate or as public information has been developed.

Since there was the minimum of publicity resulting from the inquiry into munitions plants, shipbuilding yards and the aircraft industry, the committee has taken another tack. Seizing upon President Roosevelt's phrase that profits must be taken out of war, Senator Nye and his colleagues turned their so-called "experts" loose on the track of those illusive profits. The result is a piece of proposed legislation that goes beyond anything ever offered before in the way of tax legislation. Of course, it is entirely likely that nothing at all will come of the Nye bill insofar as improvement of our taxation methods is concerned. But its radical and altogether unworkable character is looked upon as necessitating a frank examination of its provisions.

Because the committee started out to investigate the munitions industry and notwithstanding the fact that since it has wandered all over the surface of the earth with its inquiry there is a widespread belief that its tax bill will apply only to the munitions industry during war time. Such is not the case. It goes far beyond the munitions industry and, indeed, it affects every corporation and every individual with an income of $1,000 or more.

Probably the Flynn-Nye tax proposal won't get anywhere at all. Certainly it will not be enacted in this session of congress. Nevertheless, when a senate committee seriously introduces a bill that would limit income of a corporation to 3 per cent of its peace-time capitalization—the government would take the rest by taxation—it is regarded by many as time to call a halt. It ought to be added here that obviously the country is faced with the highest taxes it has ever known in consequence of the tremendous spending that has been going on during the last two years and which is to be continued. Those taxes are due to come along within another year or two.

Flynn-Nye Tax Bill

I referred above to the 3 per cent limit on incomes of corporations. This is brought about through a tax of 50 per cent on the first 6 per cent of earnings of every corporation. Above the 6 per cent earnings, it is proposed in the Flynn-Nye bill to take 100 per cent of the total.

Tucked away in one section of the bill is language that is ordinarily referred to as a "joker." It represents the first attempt by congress, rather by the sponsors of this legislation, to circumvent exemption of government securities from taxation. The federal, state, municipal, county and other governmental jurisdictions have the power to issue bonds and other securities free from taxation. This makes such securities attractive. For quite a while there has been agitation to do away with this tax exemption privilege. Nobody has found a way, however, to get legislative bodies to enact the necessary provisions into law. So, we have something like fifty billions of dollars in securities of this type outstanding. If this income were taxable, of course, it would represent a considerable increase in revenue to the federal government through income levies. Thus it is stated the Flynn-Nye proposal is attempting to reach that income without actually violating the contract which the issuing government made with the buyers of those securities.

The effort to tax income from these securities has been worked out in a fashion that is better illustrated than defined. Assume that a corporation had invested a large portion of its surplus or reserves in tax-exempt bonds. The bill proposes first to limit the amount of income which that corporation may receive and to tax half of the remainder. The result is that income from tax-exempt securities would be mingled with other forms of income and the government would dip its hand into the total and take whatever amount the law prescribed.

How It Would Work

Another provision of the bill would result in government confiscation in wartime of every dollar of income that any official of any corporation, company or partnership received in excess of $10,000 per year. It is to be remembered here that the above-mentioned $10,000 would not be tax-exempt. Those drawing such salaries still would have to pay the government $2,800 in taxes on the $10,000 income. In other words, since nearly every one receiving salaries of this size serves in an official capacity with some commercial unit, the tax provision actually reaches nearly all of the individual income tax payers.

Certainly, the drastic rates affect all persons receiving any income of consequence because there is a sharp reduction in the personal exemption prescribed and the tax rates themselves are boosted higher than a kite. For instance, a married man with an income of $3,000 a year would have to pay a minimum of $300 to the government immediately war was declared.

The lethargy that continues among national Republican leaders is beginning to grow irksome upon minor wheelhorses and individual Republicans of lesser consequence in national affairs. Word is coming through to Washington from various sections of the country indicating considerable dissatisfaction with the management of Republican party affairs by the present regime, headed by Henry P. Fletcher, national chairman. There is likewise a growing volume of criticism of the work of Senator Hastings of Delaware, and Representative Bolton of Ohio, joint chairmen of the Republican-senatorial-congressional committee. Superficially, at least, it appears that the Republican pot is about to boil over.

Criticize Leaders

I don't believe anybody can forecast at this time what the result is going to be. It should be said in favor of Mr. Fletcher and Co-Chairmen Hastings and Bolton that they are in a tough spot. They are criticized if they do and criticized if they don't. Yet the fact remains and I think it is recognized everywhere that none of these three has taken a positive position nor has he initiated any constructive effort in behalf of his party's political future.

From among Republicans who yet remain in congress, I have picked up much private discussion indicating fear on their part that the Republican party management is faced with an upheaval equivalent to the Roosevelt New Deal among the Democrats unless the party leaders awaken from their unperturbed sleep. The point made most frequently is that President Roosevelt actually has inaugurated his campaign for re-election, and the Republicans are doing absolutely nothing about it. It is well to recall that Postmaster General Farley is planning to retire—just when nobody knows—to devote his attention to his other job, which is chairman of the Democratic national committee. This information can be construed in only one way now that Mr. Fletcher is getting ready to take his seat again at the helm of the campaign machine. Some of the smarter Republicans insist that this should be notice to the guiding lights of their own party to begin construction of political trenches.

Something may come of the Republican sectional meetings now being planned. It is just possible that out of these group discussions may be evolved some national program, or the makings of a national policy. It is likewise possible that from these group discussions some individual may arise who would be a worthwhile leader for the party against Mr. Roosevelt next year. To date, according to all of the information I can obtain, that leader is not in sight. Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, who was reelected to the senate last year in the midst of a Democratic landslide, has been suggested. On the other hand, wise politicians tell me that because Senator Vandenberg has been mentioned thus early, he is likely to be out of the running when the convention time comes because in politics it is the early bird who catches the curse instead of the worm.

But to forget the weaknesses of the Republicans in leadership does not cause one to forget the palpable failure made by those in charge at present. So far as the public record shows they have taken no advantage whatsoever of vulnerable spots in the New Deal armor. No administration has been or can be perfect. President Roosevelt does not claim that his New Deal is perfect. He has gone so far as to admit failures in certain of his countless experiments. It is possible that the Republican organization has made note of these failures but it can be stated as a fact that they have made very little use of them by way of political attack.

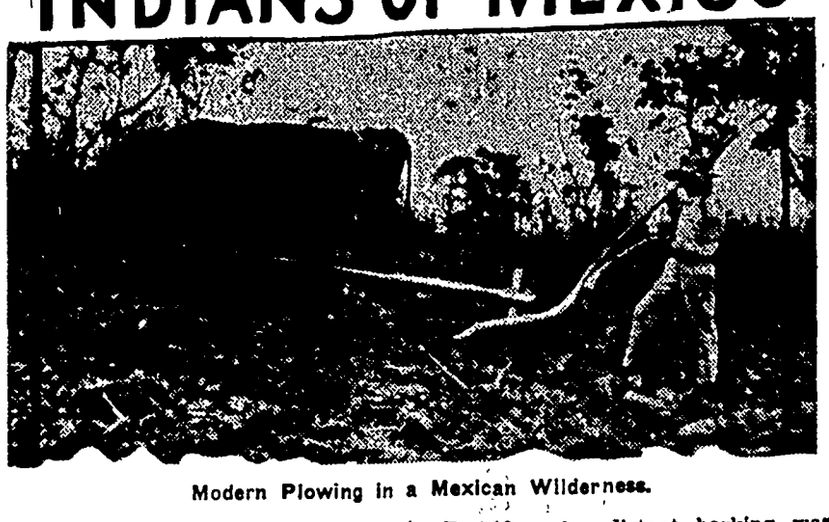
INDIANS OF MEXICO



Modern Plowing in a Mexican Wilderness.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

THERE are in Mexico nearly 500 tribes and more than 200 languages, some differing from others as much as French from Chinese. Not until one has wandered about Mexico can one appreciate how incomplete was the Spanish conquest. Only isolated Spaniards and occasional marauding expeditions ever penetrated to southern Oaxaca and Guerrero. No wealthy monasteries, sure sign of Spanish infiltration, were ever founded there, and the grandiose churches, so striking elsewhere in the republic, are conspicuously absent.

Since the coming of the Spaniards this region has remained commercially, culturally and artistically a backwater.

Traveling from the town of Oaxaca toward Acapulco on the Pacific coast, three men recently put afoot when their bus "decomposed" at Mitla, walked across four racial and linguistic frontiers—the Zapotec, Chatino, Mixtec, and Negro. At Tlacolula they were close to yet another tribe, the Mixe, distantly related to the Mayas of Yucatan. Even so, they omitted the Amusgos (Amishgos), Tlapanecos, and isolated colonies of Aztecs, all of whom retain "islands" in Mixtec territory.

Variety in Everything.

The physical characteristics of Mexico are as varied as the civilizations. Vegetation and scenery change with almost every league, the enormous variations in altitude enabling one to pass from subarctic to tropical climate in a single day. Sometimes within a few hours are seen eagles from the high mountains and parrots from the tropical jungle.

The route of the travelers is unlikely to attract tourists. There is no railway, no road, no hotel, no bed, no butter or fresh vegetables, and the discomfort has recently increased since the virtual destruction by earthquake of nearly half the towns in the region traversed.

The white man seldom travels in this region. He is not only excellent bait for the numerous bandits on wilder stretches of the road, but an object of suspicion among quite well-intentioned Indians, who imagine he is searching for gold. They have never forgotten the Spaniards' quest for treasure, and to say you are collecting beetles or studying architecture is to them absurd. They are victims, too, of even stranger traditions, notably that the white man desires to fatten Indians and boil them for lubricating oil, or to steal native babies for similar "reduction" as airplane fuel.

For many reasons members of the party deemed it advisable to disguise themselves and to travel as the poorest peons. They emerged from the market of Oaxaca in white and purple trousers, heavy leather sandals, and broad-brimmed hats. Over their shoulders and chiefly for use at night, they carried large woolen Oaxaca blankets, or serapes—blue, white and black. Their money was carried in stout leather belts, all of it in silver and copper coins, for bills are not accepted in villages where men cannot read their value.

Finally, they gathered machetes, a dagger, old flour sacks to contain food, and for water a glass garrafon neatly dressed in a straw jacket like a bottle of Chianti. All these "personal effects" were fitted into brilliantly colored string bags.

"Pegasus" and "Pullman."

The party set out for Tlacolula, the railhead near Mitla, and these invested in two donkeys. Unfortunately, these proved too decrepit to carry both passengers and baggage—a fact not discovered until the bill had been footed and the pathetic animals had been hopefully baptized "Pegasus" and "Pullman."

Chiefly for the donkeys' benefit, a donkey-driver, guide, or "porter" was engaged. It is doubtful whether he had ever driven, directed, or counseled donkeys before, since by trade he was a sandal-maker; but he spoke Zapotec and rejoiced in a grandiloquent name, perhaps his chief claim to immortality. Under his auspices the donkeys were loaded with four tall cylindrical baskets for the luggage.

As the party dawdled out of the sleepy little town of Tlacalula, it was four o'clock in the afternoon, and afternoon was in the atmosphere. The market was deserted. Pigs and scraggy dogs of uncertain race and temper sprawled in the dust heaps. Only the grunting donkeys broke the stillness of siestatime.

Soon men and animals were out in the plowed fields with the village behind them, a blue-green gem on the sunburnt plain. All around, the horizon was bounded by lofty turquoise mountains. Here and there on the lower slopes stood big white churches with red domes like toy rubber balls sliced in half. In the foreground were vast fields of maguey, in regular lines—an army on parade.

By 10 p. m. distant barking was heard, the canine concert which invariably preludes a Zapotec village, and that night the travelers slept on the earthen floor of a windowless adobe house, with a cat and three turkeys as companions. At 4 a. m. they rose and set forth again into the dark. Sunrise found them at the top of a low mountain pass. Before them stretched a wide valley still deep in purple shadow, and in the distance blue mountains with serrated crests bathed in pale golden light. This was the Valley of Ocotlan, a branch of the great Valley of Oaxaca, center of Zapotec civilization.

Produce Spread Out.

By 8:30 they reached the town, dominated by a domed church, salmon pink and pale jade green. In the market place, beneath striped awnings—some white, some terra cotta, like the sails of Venetian barges—all local produce is spread out. There is milk in plenty, coffee, chocolate, several kinds of bread, and dried fish brought up from the coast by mule and donkey. Oranges, bananas, and pineapples are piled in decorative heaps.

Even peanuts and beans, including special white beans, to be eaten on Fridays, are laid out in geometrical patterns, for the Mexican has an inborn sense of design, and nothing is too humble to be arranged with care and displayed as a work of art.

This innate artistic sense is specially evident in the hand-and-home-made pottery. Almost every village retains its particular style in pottery, and towns such as Guadalajara and Puebla have achieved a more than national reputation for their wares.

One of the party, suffering from headache, approached an herb stall. In a prominent position lay a red-crested woodpecker, which, as the chief cure for heart disease, is as obvious a professional sign to Indians as the barber's pole to us. Laid out on straw mats were starfish, sea shells, rattles from rattlesnakes, birds of brilliant plumage, and herbs to cure diseases both human and animal; but, curiously enough, for headache and heartache the cure was identical—two little patches of banana leaf affixed to the temples.

In the blazing noonday sun they set forth again across the treeless plain, its monotony relieved by giant candelabra cactus and many small artificial mounds, on one of which a man was actually sowing corn. Although this valley is still thickly populated, it is no center of civilization, as in the days when Mitla was built and pyramids or temples rose on nearly every hill. Though the party trudged on all day and well into the night, it passed only one hamlet, San Pedro Apostol.

Walls of Organ Cactus.

Typical of Zapotec villages were defiant walls of organ cactus lining the roadway and barricading every house—impenetrable barriers to all save the lean dogs who squeezed through to get a bark at the approaching cavalcade. Characteristic, too, were the numerous pigs and turkeys, the former "dressed" in wooden triangles to prevent their prying into other people's business, and the latter resplendent with gorgeous blue throats and heads and dazzling white plumage. Turkeys are always to the fore in Mexico.

The second night was passed at Ayoquezco, "The Place of Still Tortoises." Here the men slept on the stone floor of a large earthquake-ruined hacienda along with 15 peons of both sexes, who, swathed in serapes and laid out in regular lines resembled recumbent effigies of knights in an ancient church.

The following day they left the great Valley of Oaxaca, their trail keeping for a time to the Rio Atoyac; but where this river bends round a mighty limestone bluff the path scales a mountain, then descends abruptly to Sola de Vega. In four hours they climbed this pass, famed for rattlesnakes and tarantula spiders.

Beyond Sola neither an automobile nor even an oxcart can pass. The precipitous trail to Juquila ascends 2,800 feet, then drops nearly 7,700 feet, only to rise immediately another 8,000. These tremendous variations in altitude form a commercial, racial, and linguistic barrier, beyond which the level of civilization falls considerably. Sola is nominally Zapotec. The next town is Chatino.

This high "frontier" pass has typical changes of vegetation. First the travelers climbed through shaded banana groves and fields of sugar cane; then to a zone of cultivated maguey; then, at 6,000 feet, to a more temperate zone with oaks and other trees. Finally, perhaps a thousand feet higher, they entered a cool forest of long-leaf pine, the trees resplendent with white orchids, like candles on a Christmas tree, and gorgeous crimson flowers perched high in the upper branches.

Dental Hygiene

The Road to Health

By DR. R. ALLEN GRIFFITH

HOW TEETH INFECT THE SYSTEM

WITH the exception of venereal disease, every disease, every germ that enters the human system must enter through the mouth, nose or a break in the skin. The mouth is the most extensive breeding place for germs. Before any disease can gain a foothold in the human system, it must have a place of incubation and a period of incubation and that place is the unclean mouth.

Where are the pneumococcus, the tubercle bacillus, the virus of scarlet fever, measles, croup, etc., most frequently found? In the unclean human mouth. We are not astonished when we find millions of chains of the six varieties of streptococci and millions of pneumococci in the average mouth and these are among the dangerous disease germs. All of these micro-organisms are absorbed from spaces around and between the teeth into the mucous membrane of the mouth and into the tonsils. They are swallowed into the stomach and drawn into the lungs. Constant and persistent doses of micro-organisms and their toxins ultimately break down the resistance of the healthy human organism.

The germs found in diseased teeth and septic mouths are swept into the stomach with solid and liquid food and infected saliva. While many of them are destroyed, many of them pass into the intestines where they set up putrefaction and manufacture toxins and food poisons. These have a special predilection for nerve cells.

The absorption of micro-organisms and their toxins into the circulation is responsible for rheumatism, arthritis and endocarditis. The micro-organisms are carried by the blood stream to the joints and heart where they produce these destructive diseases. This has been proven by injecting into guinea pigs cultures made from the mouths of persons so infected, the same diseases being produced in the guinea pigs. Also, treatment of the mouth has caused an improvement or cure of the diseased conditions.

Without treatment of the mouth, the cure of many of these diseases by systematic treatment otherwise has failed and will continue to fail.

At the Century of Progress in Chicago in the dental exhibit was shown the fossil jaw of a mammoth which contained a dental abscess that would hold three and one-half quarts of pus. Who knows but what this dental abscess may have caused the death of even this immense prehistoric animal?

THE FIRST PERMANENT TOOTH

THE first permanent tooth comes into the mouth between the sixth and seventh years. It comes in just back of the baby teeth and is frequently mistaken for a baby tooth because it does not replace another tooth. It is called the six-year molar, and is the largest and most important tooth in the dental arch.

The six year molar is of the greatest concern to dentists. Most dentists are familiar with the troublesome nature of the tooth. It drives more children to the dentist than all other teeth combined.

If we are to do the most for children we must save the six-year molars. When the six year molars are extracted the dental arch is robbed of its support. It soon collapses. The teeth in front of it fall backward and a space appears between the front teeth. The beautiful, symmetrical curve of the face is lost, and nothing can restore it.

The six-year molars are particularly valuable because they do most of the chewing for a period of five years. These four teeth take their places when the child is six years of age, the upper biting squarely upon the lower. There are no teeth back of them until the child is twelve years of age, when the second molars come in.

In front of them are the baby molars which are small and frail and are not made for chewing heavy food. If the baby molars are lost or decayed they cannot assist the six-year molars in chewing food. Thus, for five years, the four six-year molars are compelled to chew all the food that goes to nourish the rapidly developing child. The six-year molars also act as a prop to hold the jaws apart while the other permanent teeth are coming in. The pressure of the jaws falls upon these four teeth until the other back teeth come in between the ages of ten and twelve, and in case one or two of these first permanent teeth are lost, the jaws are not held open the correct distance and the jaws close upon the other teeth that are only part way in, forcing them out of line and preventing them from coming entirely in.

The only proper way to care for your children's teeth is to place the child in the care of a dentist at three years of age. He will keep the child's teeth free from decay if the visits are made at frequent intervals. He will fill small cavities as soon as they appear, and keep the teeth free from stains and tartar. He will tell you how to keep the mouth in a clean, healthy condition, and if this rule is followed the permanent teeth will come in in a clean, healthy mouth free from decay.

World Population Put at Around 2,000,000,000

How many people inhabit the earth?

In our own country as well as the leading ones periodical censuses are taken, which give the exact figures every so often and by comparing these with previous ones it is easy for the mathematical sharps to figure out really reliable estimates of the population in between times.

But among the uncivilized tribes in various parts of the world no count is possible, and for the black races of Africa and some of the yellow ones of China and Central Asia relatively little information is available. Nevertheless, after gathering together all information possible the statistical institute of the League of Nations in 1930 estimated the world population at approximately 2,000,000,000 human beings, and that is the generally accepted figure for the world at large.

It is recognized that the world population is steadily increasing but in the absence of actual figures few are brave enough to hazard a guess as to the rate. Prof. E. M. East of Harvard university, however, has ventured to estimate the annual increase at a little more than 18,000,000 or about 50,000 a day.

Concerning this subject Prof. A. N. Carr-Saunders of Liverpool university, England, a recognized world authority on the subject, issued an estimate last year for use by the Encyclopedia Britannica in which he declared the world now inhabited by more than 2,025,000,000 persons and furthermore, they are steadily increasing at the rate of 20,000,000 per year.

He credits Asia, the largest continent, with the greatest number of people — some 1,071,000,000 (not counting Russia)—or a little more than half the world population. Europe, which ranks fifth in the size of continents, is given second place as to population with a total of 382,000,000 (excluding Russia). Russia alone is granted about 164,000,000 while all of Africa, white and black, has but 143,000,000 and North America around 135,000,000, of which about 127,000,000 are United Statesians. He credits South America with 85,000,000; Central America 35,000,000 and Australia and Oceania with a combined 10,000,000 to make up his estimated total.

One finding is particularly surprising to most in view of the fact that Germany, Italy and a few other countries offer substantial endowments for newly married couples and a bonus for each child born. This is that the population in Russia seems to be increasing faster than anywhere else on earth—the increase being estimated at about 4,000,000 a year, or 2 per cent.

One per cent annual increase is considered the average, and even the Japs, regarded heretofore as the most rapidly increasing race, increase but little faster than the normal rate.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Vessels Put Together Like Children's Blocks

In more than 10,000 separate parts and packed in crates, an admiralty designed river gunboat was recently shipped from Southampton to Shanghai in a liner.

Originally the vessel was complet-ed at a Southampton shipyard, the work of building taking eight months. It was then dismantled and the various parts were made into 260 packages, the largest of which was over 20 feet long and weighed about three tons.

It is expected that the vessel will be completely assembled three months from the date of the delivery at Shanghai.

Vessels are occasionally shipped overseas in parts because it is not always expedient to send them long distances under their own power.

Not long ago a twin-screw passenger steamer constructed in England was shipped in pieces to Lake Albert Nyanza, Africa. It had a dead weight tonnage of 280.—London Answers.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT

A recent Oklahoma Fish and Game Bulletin contained the following information regarding the rattlesnake:

"Did you know chemists have discovered that the white of an egg contains exactly the same proportions of the same elements as rattlesnake venom? One is a food, and one a deadly poison—IF it is injected into the flesh by the snakes fangs. Yet, if the snake venom is taken into the body in the same manner as food or drink, it is harm less.

"Young rattlesnakes are born with fully deveoped fangs. Each time its skin is shed, which is twice or three times yearly, the fangs are also shed. But in each instance, a fully developed set of new fangs has been grown to replace the old. Rattlesnake fangs are one of the hardest known of all known substances, as indicated from certain of these reptiles which have died or been killed and their stomachs examined afterwards. Oftentimes, upon examination of the stomachs, the gatric juices have detroyed bones and teeth of small rodents which have been the snake's prey. At the same time, parts of the snake's own fangs which it had swallowed at shedding time, have been found intact."

1934 CORN LOAN ARE DUE JULY FIRST

The Federal Government's 1934 corn loan program will be completed on July 1, 1935, when producer-borrowers' notes become due and payable, it is stated by the AAA.

In view of the prevailing prices for corn, all producer borrowers are expected to repay fully the amount of their 1934 loans, at the loan value rate of 55 cents per bushel, plus interest at 4 percent and insurance charges, prior to or at maturity on July 1, this year.

No extension of this maturity date will be made.

In the meantime, producers have the option of making partial payments and obtaining the release of an amount of sealed corn equivalent to the partial payment made. All such partial releases must be authorized by the Commodity Credit Corporation and must be made under the supervision of an official State sealer who will then reseal the crib.

While 1934 loans are due and payable on July 1, officials point out that provisions for Government loans on corn stored on farms in surplus-producing areas definitely will be a part of the corn-hog adjustment program for 1935.

STILL TIME TO RUN SEED CORN GERMINATION TESTS

If you haven't made your seed corn germination, you still have time to make a preliminary test. A lot of 1933 crib corn will be used for seed this year. Tests in the Seed Laboratory at Iowa State College indicate that there is much good seed corn in Iowa for 1935 planting.

By far the largest percentage of samples received at the laboratory have shown high germination, 90 percent or more, according to Dr. R. H. Porter, extension plant pathologist. Tests of 1933 crib corn, however, have shown that there is considerable variation in quality-germination ranging from as low as 60 percent to as high as 100 percent.

YOUR CHILD AND THE SCHOOL

By Dr. ALLEN G. IRELAND
Inventor, Physical and Health Education
New Jersey State Department of Public Instruction

Sissy

Only one who has been called "sissy" in real earnest can describe the full horror of what is implied.

Our mistake is to say "Oh, it's just a kid's fun, it doesn't mean anything." And it's a particularly sad mistake when spoken by one who is the parent or teacher of a child so tagged by his playmates. Because it means that a real opportunity for service is being overlooked. It's a challenge.

When the kids tag on that label "sissy" don't think it's their mistake. They're seldom wrong. They know all the signs. If you can, consult a good psychologist or psychiatrist. "Sissy" needs the best treatment. If you can't, steel yourself to keep hand's off. Let him fight his own battles. Let him taste defeat. Withhold your too ready sympathy, but show interest in his every effort to make good. Encourage self-confidence, and for each success have a simple word of praise.

Encourage Bobbie, is Dr. Ireland's advice to the school. He tells why in his next article.

Transportation

Blowing Up Skins Which Buoy a Yellow River Raft.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

STREAMLINE trains and giant airliners recently have been in the spotlight in America; Italy is still applauding an airminded son who sped through the air more than 400 miles an hour a short time ago; and Great Britain is just quieting down after celebrating the victory of her flyers who won the London-Melbourne air race. In Germany streamline trains are linking additional cities as quickly as the new type transportation equipment can be manufactured.

Modern transportation, this. But one can still find types of transportation facilities, even in the world's largest cities and their rural neighborhoods, that were in use decades and even centuries ago.

There is not a sizable town in the United States in which one cannot hail a taxi, and in many of them charter a plane; yet the top-hatted cabbie, whose pompous figure held sway over traffic on boulevards in the gay nineties, has not been entirely shelved. These "taximen" of another era have jealously watched as new traffic lights have been installed, traffic lanes have been painted to keep modern motorists from crushing bumpers and fenders, and streets have been widened and trees sacrificed to make room for more of their rivals; yet they still constitute something of a traffic problem.

Ox-Drawn Vehicles.

Within sight of concrete, 40-mile-an-hour highways, and less than a hundred miles from Washington, D. C., and Annapolis, Md., ox-drawn vehicles still lumber along; while in the isolated mountain regions of the West, surefooted burros and pack mules continue to be the only companions of many rugged prospectors.

Millions of visitors arrive at Atlantic City by automobile, airplane and train, yet to see the "sights" along the Boardwalk, they hire three-wheeled rolling chairs. Others arrive at Bermuda aboard palatial steamships but take to bicycles and horse-drawn carriages to tour the island.

On the corners of modern, wide thoroughfares of Shanghai, Hongkong and Canton, China, the traveler hails a riksha and weaves perilously through a maze of motor and pedestrian traffic. In the alley-like back streets of the native towns, however, he may prefer a sedan chair to avoid jostling men and women and stumbling over children to whom these mere byways are playgrounds.

What traveler leaves Durban, Natal, without employing a Zulu rikshaman? The dark-hued tribesman in gay-feathered headdress and scant clothing, is one of the colorful features of the South African city. In remote Szechwan province, China, wheelbarrows, which are the local transports, have worn ruts in flagstone pavements; in Sumatra, if one goes native, he must travel in a buffalo-drawn cart whose thatched top is shaped like a sway-backed horse, and is pointed at each end. In Palermo, Sicily, the purely Sicilian way to get about is by native cart, a two-wheeled vehicle on whose side panels are gayly depicted Bible scenes and Sicilian panoramas; and in Ireland, the Irish jaunting car on which passengers sit back to back and face outward lends atmosphere to a tour of the Emerald Isle.

Llamas still carry loads in the Andes, and elephants still are favored among the tiger hunters of India. In spite of progress in Belgium, the morning milk is still delivered by dogcart at many a doorstep, and dog sleds are yet the most dependable transportation in the icy wastes of the Arctic and Antarctic. The tired explorer enjoys comfortable travel in a hammocklike chair borne by native porters in central Africa; the mountaineers of northern India and western China employ the yak as their beast of burden; the camel still plods the caravan routes of north Africa, Arabia and central Asia; and the carabao (water buffalo) is the dependable draft-animal of the East Indian islands.

"Floating Population."

Land transportation is of no interest whatever to millions of Chinese. Children are born, grow up, marry, carry on their lives, and work aboard the sampans of China's floating cities.

Most of the great river cities of southern and central China have such a "floating population," but the boat dwellers of Shanghai and Canton form large communities in themselves. A traveler of sufficient energy could laboriously progress for miles by jumping from the deck of one sampan to another.

Like the Dutch canal boat dwellers, these river folk are a race unto themselves, apart from the common run of their fellow men. In many cases their mode of life has been handed down from father to son for generations. When China's teeming acres became overcrowded and expensive, and a growing commerce demanded river transportation in even larger volume, many ingenious Chinese combined business with economy and took to living aboard their tiny craft.

Although business might call far and wide along the numerous rivers and canals it was the large commercial centers at the mouths of mighty streams that offered the most lively carrying trade. Hence these cities early became headquarters for the water dwellers.

The riverman often made long voyages up country, but he always came home to roost. Hence the dirty, evil-smelling stretches of river and backwash surrounding such centers as Canton and Shanghai, and even around Hongkong and Singapore, became the native heath of an army of sampan dwelling Chinese, who from childhood have known no other life.

The visible means of support of these communities is the carrying trade from wharf to wharf, and from bund to steamer or junk, across river and up canals.

Barnyard Afloat.

Some sampans house petty merchants and peddlers who carry on a small trade in the necessaries of life from boat to boat within the water colony itself. Occasionally a craft is filled to overflowing with huge white ducks which fatten in the daytime on the tidal mud flats or harvested fields, and at night walk a gangplank back to their floating barnyard. They proceed, one by one, in a quacking and pushing single file, each hurrying not to be the last duck aboard. The return home in the evenings is sometimes hastened, it is said, by giving the last duck a sharp crack with a switch. The awkward procession soon learns the trick and a comic tumult arises not to be the unfortunate tail of the procession.

Chinese sampans are marvelously easy to handle, being the product of generations of adaptation to environment. They dart like water spiders here and there amidst the harbor traffic, clustering like barnacles around the great steamers anchored offshore. With lightning swiftness, they flee in droves before an approaching storm, each knowing as if by instinct his own place in the quiet reaches of sheltered water. There is no mistake, no confusion, each bit falls unerringly into place like a gigantic picture puzzle. When the high wind arrives each craft is in place, with not a sampan left over, or a vacant square of water big enough to hold one.

In spite of the shifting needs of commerce, family life aboard proceeds about its daily routine as usual, albeit in rather more cramped quarters. Clothes, vegetables, and babies are washed side by side in the stream and the cooking is done above a diminutive brazierlike stove. Growing children help with the handling of the boat and cargo, and grandmothers in blue cotton ragged garments smoke long-stemmed pipes. At night all draw together and neighborly chatter from boat to boat sounds like that of a newly arrived flock of blackbirds. The river folk are poor but extremely cheerful, especially over the evening meal.

Lights from great modern liners shine across the harbor and music from an occasional gaily decked pleasure barge floats from the mid-stream channel. In few other places lurks so strongly the spell of the East.

Raft Transports.

On the shallow, shifting Hwang Ho, or Yellow river of China rafts are the principal means of transport, especially for freight cargoes. There are two types of raft: one using as buoys inflated sheepskins, and the other, large ox-hides which are stuffed with wool and then tied up to keep them water-tight. The sheepskin rafts vary in size, according to the use for which they are intended, ranging from as few as 12 to 15 skins on the small one-man rafts. For the large rafts some 120 ox-hides are used.

The ox-hides are carefully treated on the inside with salt and oil. This treatment not only preserves and waterproofs them but also keeps them flexible. There is no extraordinary technique required in the construction of a raft. Poles are lashed together, forming a framework to which the hides or sheepskins are fastened.

Moslem Chinese who form a considerable percentage of the population of Kansu province, are the rafts men on the Yellow river. A sturdy people, they stand well the hardships of river life. It is far from an easy life with all the contrasts of heat and cold and the strenuous labor involved in handling the clumsy transports through the rapids; or freeing them, once they have stranded on a sand bar. The men, however, are happy and friendly.

Dental Hygiene

The Road to Health

By DR. R. ALLEN GRIFFITH

THE SIXTH-YEAR MOLAR

THE first permanent teeth to erupt in the mouth are called the "sixth-year molars" because they come in during the sixth year.

They also might be called the most important teeth in the mouth.

These teeth are of the utmost importance, as they present a large masticating surface, and if permanently lost, always cause a collapse of the dental arch and frequently cause the face to be contracted. To the orthodontist (a dentist who straightens teeth) they are the key to the arch. By looking at their occlusion he is able to determine if the jaws are in their proper relation to each other.

The premature loss of these teeth is a calamity to any individual and they should be watched with jealous care. They come in during the most irresponsible period of childhood, and no child of that age can be expected to pay any attention to the care of these important teeth without the watchful guidance of the parents.

If you care for the preservation of your child's health, there is every reason in the world why the baby teeth should receive as much care and attention as the permanent teeth. There is no possible excuse, no reason under the sun why either the baby teeth or the sixth-year molars should be neglected. The baby teeth are easily forgotten by the child where they are so healthy and clean that they are lost in the natural way. If properly cared for, they are lost as nature intended. They are not so easily forgotten by the child when they are allowed to become a jagged, broken, decayed and abscessed lot and are lost through pain and sleeplessness.

The uncleanliness of the baby teeth is surely transferred to the sixth-year molars, and the memory of pain endured and the physical scars will be carried through life. A child whose teeth are allowed to go to wreck and ruin through ignorance or neglect on the part of parents, who are responsible for both his mental and physical welfare, has every right to hold them responsible for his suffering. The baby teeth should remain as white and sound as little pearls. It is absolutely criminal for parents to neglect the baby teeth. It is worse to neglect the sixth-year molars.

The last of the baby teeth are not lost until the tenth or eleventh year. The sixth-year molars, which are the first of the permanent teeth, have been in the mouth four or five years by this time.

OUR DUTY

WHEN all is said and done, health is the greatest asset that a human being can possess. There are many other things that are conducive to happiness, but they sink into second place when we think of a diseased or crippled body.

Most any physician who was on the draft board during the World war, will tell you of the large number of young men who were physically unfit to be classed as A-1 men, and they will also tell you that most of these physical defects could have been prevented or eradicated in youth. These were the school children of yesterday.

Our schools are wasting enormous sums in educating, or trying to educate, the children who are handicapped by ill health, when the expenditure of much smaller amounts in a judicious health program would produce an enormous saving in economy and efficiency. A dollar spent promptly in a timely, constructive effort to conserve a child's health will be more fruitful for the child and for human society than will a thousand dollars applied twenty years later.

Better than 90 per cent—24,000,000—of our school children have defective teeth, and all defective teeth are injurious to health. Some of these defective teeth are deadly menaces to their owners.

Seventy-five per cent—17,000,000—of the school children of the United States have physical defects which are potentially or actually detrimental to health, and most of these defects are remediable.

One of the most appalling revelations of recent years is the conclusion based on unrefuted evidence that the rural school children of the country are handicapped by more physical defects than pupils in city schools. While several significant causes seem to be responsible for this condition, the present inferiority of country children depends in part upon the fact that city children receive more health care than those in rural regions.

Where an intensive study of mouth conditions has been carried out, it has been proved that dental attention alone will cure at least 50 per cent of the other troubles. Most of the organic heart troubles, glandular diseases, malnutrition and tuberculosis are caused by defective teeth.

It has been said that if all the dentists in the United States were sent to New York, they could not adequately care for the persons with defective teeth in that city.

While all these facts are well known, doesn't it seem as if a little money should be spent upon the physical as well as the mental welfare of the children in our schools?

Extra Pay

By RUTH ASTON

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

JUDY was only a movie extra, but Andy had fallen for her harder than if she were Mona Manning herself. Judy was twice as pretty as the famous star, only half as sophisticated, and ten times as sweet. The life guard had figured the whole thing out mathematically when the girls had come down to Long Beach on location ten days before.

But just now he stood glaring down as she sat in the sand.

"So you care more about your darned publicity than you do about me!"

Her blue eyes flashed angrily. "I care about holding down my job! If you'd ever been out of work as long as I have, you'd realize how much my pay envelope means to me!"

"I don't care how much you think of your pay envelope. I don't like that guy Turner even if he is a director. And I don't want you to go out with him"

Judy shrugged shapely brown shoulders "I'll go out with him every night in the week if it's necessary to keep my job!"

Andy glared at her. "And I suppose you'd let him make love to you, just to hold your job?"

Judy flushed, then laughed. "Don't be melodramatic, darling! Life isn't like that!"

"Don't be too sure I've heard of directors who expected more than just good acting from the pretty extra girls."

Judith sobered for a moment "I know. There was a girl who killed herself—"

She shuddered, but the next instant forced a laugh. "We're being awfully silly. Just because Mr. Turner likes to take me out is no sign he has designs on me!"

The man scowled. "Knowing Turner, I'd say that was quite a definite sign."

Andy saw very little of Judy the next few days although never for a moment did he stop thinking of her. On three different occasions he had seen her riding in the assistant director's long yellow roadster.

And then early one morning she came down to the beach, and his strong heart began doing strange things in his deep chest.

She carried herself with a determined air this morning that was new to her. Andy was puzzled as she strode out to the end of the windy pier. Surely she wasn't going to dive? The undertow beneath the pier was terrific. Only an expert swimmer could withstand that pulling toward the piles.

Good heavens! She was standing outside the railing at the pier's end, her shoulders drooping, her whole attitude that of hopeless dejection! Andy looked about wildly for movie cameras, but none were in sight. He was the only person on the beach. And just as he looked back at her, Judy slipped off into the water.

The life guard raced to the pier and covering its length in Marathon strides, dove into the water. He saw Judith clinging to one of the barnacle-covered piles under the pier. If only she could keep her grip! But the barnacles were sharp and would cut her hands. With long swift strokes he swam toward her.

"Hold on!" he shouted, but his voice sounded tiny.

She must have heard for she turned her head to look at him. A strange expression came into her eyes. Then deliberately she released her hold and dropped into the rushing green-black water!

Andy dived after her but soon discovered that she did not want to be rescued. She struggled desperately to free herself.

"Let me go!" she gasped when they reached the surface of the water. She kicked violently with both legs and pounded him with her fists.

Andy was bitterly determined. "Stop that! Do you want me to knock you out?"

One of his arms encircled her tightly, and with his other arm and legs he kept them both afloat.

She tried to push away but Andy raised his fist menacingly.

"All right," she gasped. "I'll go with you."

Her body relaxed, and with one hand on his shoulder she allowed him to tow her.

Laying her down gently in the soft dry sand, he asked, "Are you all right?"

Without answering she gave him a smile of unbelievable sweetness.

Andy took one of the cold white hands in his. "Darling, I don't know what's happened, but I love you, and I want to marry you. I want to take care of you always."

"You're sweet, Andy."

"Will you marry me?"

"Yes. I didn't want you to rescue me. But when you did, I found I loved you. Do all the ladies you save fall in love with you, Andy?"

The man ignored her question. "Darling, why did you try to drown yourself? Promise me you'll never do a thing like that again."

Judy smiled, salt water still clinging to her long eyelashes. "I wasn't trying to drown myself, Andy. I was just practicing for my big scene tomorrow, with extra pay. I'm doubling for Mona Manning in a suicide act! I was supposed to swim away under the water, but you spoiled it all by rescuing me."

The Do-as-You-Please Ro

Corner in Home in Which All Members of the F Can Find Solitude, When They Desire It, Wi Be Found Valuable at Times.

By HILDA RICHMOND
National Kindergarten Association, New York City.

"Mother, Helen won't play with us!" complained Mary Joyce to her mother. "She wants to sew all the time!"

"Don't be odd, Helen," reproved Mrs. Joyce, "go and play with the others." Helen gathered up her sewing and went to join a game in which she was not really needed and at the moment was not at all interested.

Many mothers make this effort to standardize their children's play, forgetting that the individuality, the tastes, the physical condition and the inclinations of each child should have consideration. If the quiet little girl wants to finish a doll's dress while the other children romp on the lawn with the pet dog, it is hardly fair to make her put down her fascinating task just because the majority prefer another occupation. If she is apt to take insufficient exercise she needs encouragement, not force. When driven into active games under protest a child is pretty sure to dislike them more than ever.

The do-as-you-please room is a saving institution which will be used on occasions, not only by the less active child, but by every member of the family. It is not being queer or contrary that prompts a boy to want to finish a kite rather than to go fishing at a particular moment, and the little girl who happily sews on a gay doll's garment is not bound to "grow up to be a maiden lady" on that account. Concentration on an interesting activity, indisposition, or some childish sorrow are good reasons for wanting to be alone. At any rate, having a spot where one can be secure from noise and confusion is a privilege with which grown-ups can sympathize.

The do-as-you-please room may be only a corner of the living room or the shady space beneath the apple tree, but wherever it is it should be considered sacred from invasion. When children know that they are recognized as individuals just as definitely as they are regarded as members of a group, they are much better tempered, more likely to do well in school and also more original in thought and purpose. the strong child dominates the or the selfish one pouts until his way, but in the quiet corn retreat, the child can live center of a little world all his

WOUND IN HEART NO LONGER HELD AS SURE DEATH

To be shot or stabbed through the heart used to be considered certain death, and, though it is still a very effective way of killing either man or beast, research has proved that even the heart can be dealt with surgically.

A domestic servant in Mexico City, while going about her work, fell from the second floor into the street, and a knife she was carrying pierced her heart and remained embedded. In what seemed a hopeless effort to save her, the doctors at the nearest Red Cross center removed both knife and heart. For five minutes they were engaged in sewing up the heart and replacing it, yet so far from life being extinct, the patient, in spite of a serious pleurisy complication, recovered and returned to her duties apparently little the worse for her accident.

During the war, a man in hospital complained of severe pains in the region of the heart. X-rays showed a hard substance, and in the course of the operation which followed, the surgeon had to put his hand behind the heart and take away with his fingers the piece of shrapnel—about the size of a cent—which was there. During this process air was pumped into the man's lungs, and he recovered.

A rabbi was stabbed by a negro through the heart. The surgeons exposed it, and a saline solution was injected to replace the blood between pulsations. The left ventrical was then stitched up, and the patient's life was saved.

About the same time much interest was evoked by the successful operation of stitching up the heart of a Leeds butcher who was accidentally stabbed. A still more complicated case occurred of a man who was brought into a hospital with a revolver shot wound. The heart was exposed, and a bullet, found embedded in the thick flesh of the apex, was successfully removed.—London Tit-Bits.

many a doorstep, and dog sleds are yet the most dependable transportation in the icy wastes of the Arctic and Antarctic. The tired explorer enjoys comfortable travel in a hammocklike chair borne by native porters in central Africa; the mountaineers of northern India and western China employ the yak as their beast of burden; the camel still plods the caravan routes of north Africa, Arabia and central Asia; and the carabao (water buffalo) is the dependable draft-animal of the East Indian islands.

"Floating Population."

Land transportation is of no interest whatever to millions of Chinese. Children are born, grow up, marry, carry on their lives, and work aboard the sampans of China's floating cities.

Most of the great river cities of southern and central China have such a "floating population," but the boat dwellers of Shanghai and Canton form large communities in themselves. A traveler of sufficient energy could laboriously progress for miles by jumping from the deck of one sampan to another.

Like the Dutch canal boat dwellers, these river folk are a race unto themselves, apart from the common run of their fellow men. In many cases their mode of life has been handed down from father to son for generations. When China's teeming acres became Raft Transports.

On the shallow, shifting Hwang Ho, or Yellow river of China rafts are the principal means of transport, especially for freight cargoes. There are two types of raft: one using as buoys inflated sheepskins, and the other, large ox-hides which are stuffed with wool and then tied up to keep them water-tight. The sheepskin rafts vary in size, according to the use for which they are intended, ranging from as few as 12 to 15 skins on the small one-man rafts. For the large rafts some 120 ox-hides are used.

The ox-hides are carefully treated on the inside with salt and oil. This treatment not only preserves and waterproofs them but also keeps them flexible. There is no extraordinary technique required in the construction of a raft. Poles are lashed together, forming a framework to which the hides or sheepskins are fastened.

Moslem Chinese who form a considerable percentage of the population of Kansu province, are the rafts men on the Yellow river. A sturdy people, they stand well the hardships of river life. It is far from an easy life with all the contrasts of heat and cold and the strenuous labor involved in handling the clumsy transports through the rapids; or freeing them, once they have stranded on a sand bar. The men, however, are happy and friendly.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A LIBRARY BOOK

The carelessness and thoughtlessness of a few people is responsible for the tragic endings of these "true stories."

The first thing I can remember is being oozed out of a fountain pen all over sheets and sheets of paper. Next I was hammered through a typewriter, then set in type, printed on small uniform sheets of paper, and bound together. All this was all right, but one day I was loaded in a large box with lots of other books and sent on a train to a book store where I was set away in a dark corner.

After what seemed ages and ages I was again picked up, wrapped in a small package, and sent on another trip. When I was finally unwrapped, I was in a school and was carried to a desk and stuffed into a dark corner, after being handled with fingers that were far from clean.

After a while I was taken out and read for a while. Suddenly one of my pages was turned down and I was jammed into the desk again.

After a year or so of such terrible treatment, I was finally overcome and lost my cover and several pages. Now, however, I can rest in peace, for no one ever bothers me anymore, as I am a very old and decrepit looking creature.

My first recollection is of a large factory where I was with thousands of other books. Then I was given a nice long train ride.

My new home was in Klemme High School library. For the first coupe of days I was treated very nicely. One day I goto a nce long ride down the bannister. Then I was left out in the hall and someone stepped on me. One night I had to lie out all night in the cold and ran. My beautiful coat was all dirty and faded.

One sad day my coat was torn off. Many of my pages had already been torn. By the end of the year, I was a total wreck.

Criticism—Valuable And Harmful

Although criticism is most of the time helpful to the person who is criticized it is sometimes harmful. This does not mean that we never should accept criticism from anyone because criticism when it is given in the right mood is very helpful.

Many people criticize just to have something to say. They are never pleased with anyone, anything, or anything that anyone does. Many of these people who spend their time criticizing have just as bad faults as the people they criticize.

Other people criticize because of jealousy. They criticize because they are jealous of the place another person has gained for himself.

Although we should try not to pay any attention to criticism of the sort mentioned above, we should be ready to accept criticism when we need it. None of us is perfect. There is always room for improvement.—M. B.

What High School Means To Me

To some people high school is just a place to go to have something to do. We feel that these are false ideas. High school should mean more to us than that. In fact, it is a golden opportunity to get a good education. Of course, we must have a good time in school. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." However, it could be said vice versa and be true too. Many times people have applied for a job and have been asked, "Have you had a good high school education?" They have had to say, "No," and the job was given to someone else. Let's try to think of high school as something worthwhile and not something to pass away the time.—Novella Beier.

AN AIR CASTLE
(In Which Elmer's Imagination Works Overtime)

One warm day as I was lying on the lawn I began day dreaming. I dreamed-I was a knight and I wanted to do great deeds. One day I heard the sound of a horse approaching very swiftly. A girl was being chased by a villain. I rode in between him and the girl and began to fight. He was quite a coward so he soon gave up. He could pick on somebody that was weak but could not fight a man.

I tied him up on his horse and went back to the girl. She said she had been out riding horseback when she looked back and saw the villain riding up very fast. She said, "He would have got me if I hadn't had my fast horse. I am the princess and I don't know my way back to the castle. Will you please help me?" I said I would be very glad to so I took her to the castle. I got five thousand dollars for the capture of the villain and half of the kingdom. This was the end of my air castle.—Elmer Trampel.

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Much ado is being made around Washington again over lobbyists. It is true that there are now perhaps more lobbyists in Washington than at any time in the last fifteen years. It is true they are influencing legislation, and I think it can be said without fear of contradiction that lobbyists are responsible for a portion of the balking tactics in congress.

Lobbyists Active

Existence of this unusual condition in Washington carries more significance, however, than just the fact that special interests or individual interests are trying to protect themselves. From a good many sources I gather the opinion that the condition means the President's power has weakened.

It is to be remembered that when Mr. Roosevelt carried his New Deal into the White House and led the largest Democratic majority ever to control the national legislative body, that very fact thwarted lobbying. Very few of the so-called special interests had the courage to button hole individual representatives or senators to plead their cause. These representatives and senators were looking to White House leadership; their fate rested on the New Deal, and they were unable accurately to gauge what public sentiment would be if they openly disagreed with Presidential orders. In those days, the corridors of the Capitol and the house and senate office buildings were virtually deserted of petitioners—for that is what a lobbyist is.

To the extent that lobbyists operated in the early days of the Roosevelt administration, they sought to influence Presidential decision and the activities of the brain trust and underlings who drafted the Presidential programs. Once these programs had been submitted to congress, the opposition to them largely subsided and members jumped to the crack of the Presidential whip. As stated above, individual members were afraid to go against White House orders and lobbyists were afraid to combat the President's popularity.

But a year ago, various interests throughout the country began to sense a feeling that they could again talk with members of congress safely. They began organizing their representations here as they formerly had enjoyed, and little by little broadened the scope of their activities. A singular part about the present condition is the mushroom growth of the lobbyists. Supplementing their growth has been an unusual fearlessness. They are busy pushing all kinds of causes, good and bad.

Some forces estimate there are close to five hundred different groups and organizations actively petitioning congress to do this or that according to their lights. There are such gigantic lobbies as that of organized labor, agriculture and the American Legion. There are lobbies for religious and racial groups. The power interests at the moment bulk large with their lobbying activities. Individual lines of industry have their representatives here in numbers. The railroads, for example, have headquarters here for their Association of American Railroads and it is also the headquarters for the Short-line Railroad association. The bankers maintain a legislative committee of the American Bankers' association here, and even scientific groups have their people treading water in the halls of congress, watching and waiting to be sure that nothing detrimental to their interests is done by the legislators.

It will be recalled that several weeks ago Mr. Roosevelt let loose one of the bitterest messages he has ever sent to congress in denunciation of the activities of the power lobby. At that time, the vicious character of his accusations against the power interests was attributed by many observers to his intense feeling that public utility holding companies should be abolished. He felt that cliques of financiers were taking advantage of innocent investors and he wanted to tell the country about it.

Sees Power Waning

Now, however, it develops that he was shooting not only at the power group but at all so-called special interests which were seeking to protect themselves from what they regarded as flagrant violations of property rights of the established business practices. It must be said that for a few days, the President's message did have the effect of slowing down lobbying activities but the lobbyists had tasted of their own power. They are not to be frightened by any Presidential attack nor by the threat of Senator Black of Alabama to force through legislation compelling lobbyists in Washington to register. As a matter of cold fact, it is my conviction that Senator Black will find himself thoroughly circumvented in any move he may make to press for action on what is generally regarded as a ridiculous piece of legislation. It is a thirty-year-old proposal, anyway.

It all goes to show that, at least among those with the courage of their convictions, President Roosevelt is not as powerful as he was in the first year of his reign. Balking tactics in congress over the public works relief bill was but the outward sign of courage underneath. I have reported to you heretofore that there were mutterings and expressions of discontent within the President's vast majority in the house and senate. While the malcontents are not openly criticizing the President, they are able to accomplish their purpose by delay and disagreement over what ordinarily would be very minor details.

I believe it is the consensus also that the activities of petitioners for their rights are responsible to a large extent for the creation of numerous blocs in congress. It has been observed by numerous publicists that if there is danger of Fascism in the United States, it lies in this rise of blocs in congress. The natural result is to replace and break up the two old established parties. Thus far in this session there has been evidence time after time of bloc activities, one against another. This condition results in legislative trades, not all of which result in good or even well-written legislation.

When the President came through the biennial election last fall with his majorities increased, there were those who insisted that he would have his will with congress and no questions asked. They did not reckon, however, with the potential strength of the various interests watching congressional activities. I do not believe that a careful analysis of the activities of most of these lobbyists will show improper relations between them and members of congress. They are simply asserting the right of every individual, namely, the privilege to tell his representative or senator what his opinion is. Certainly, there is a growing feeling that Mr. Roosevelt gained little or nothing when he attacked the power interests, and over their shoulder all other representation in Washington.

Now that President Roosevelt has title to $4,800,000,000 to spend pretty much as he pleases, the question is heard around Washington more and more frequently, what is he going to do with it? The truth is that administration plans for utilizing this vast sum of money are so nebulous that no one can tell, even the officials themselves, to what uses it will be put. One hears about attacking the problem of soil erosion so that the destruction by dust storms will occur no more, and there is talk of many public works projects. When one tries to find out details of these, however, he is promptly confronted by a stone wall, either of silence or of a frank statement that only the outlines have thus far been considered.

How Will It Be Spent?

Conversations over luncheon tables in Washington seem to indicate that actual spending of this money in any appreciable sum will not get under way for some months. In fact, there seems to be ground for belief that nothing of substantial character will take place in a spending way before next winter. And, if that is true the comment suggests, the great appropriation will be effective only in a political way next spring and summer.

It should be remembered that the amount voted the President in this one resolution which is to be spent practically at his direction is greater than the total expenditure of the federal government for any year from 1922 to 1931.

With further references to lobbying activities, it is made to appear that two organizations have done an especially good job. I refer to the operations of the American Legion office in Washington and its fight for the veterans' bonus, and the activity of the various agricultural and farm organizations who have been fighting off certain phases of railroad legislation.

Effective Lobbying

The farmers, according to the best information I can get, are opposed to federal regulation of interstate bus and truck business because they feel the proposed legislation will hamper farm-to-market hauling. I suspect that the bus and truck group have persuaded the farm representatives to oppose regulatory measures for busses and trucks on the basis of misunderstanding. I have made numerous inquiries of legislative drafting experts and of house and senate leaders respecting the point at issue and all have assured me that the proposed federal regulation will in no way apply to farm-to-market hauling.

While the point made here is not at all important and when farm operators of trucks understand it they will doubtless shy away from the position they have taken, it illustrates how one organization will attract many followers to its ranks who actually ought not be there.

Now as to the bonus proposition, it ought to be said that the Roosevelt administration is in a hole. So well has the American Legion done its job that there is no doubt in my mind at the moment respecting the outcome. There will be bonus legislation passed by congress at this session. Whether it will be signed or vetoed by President Roosevelt depends entirely upon the nature of the bill as it finally is passed.

PRESIDENT'S SOCIAL SECURITY BILL PASSED BY THE HOUSE—HITLER IS DEFIANT.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

WITHOUT benefit of gag rule but with perfect party discipline, the administration's social security bill was jammed through the house substantially as President Roosevelt wants it. The final vote was 372 to 33. It may be some weeks before it is passed by the senate, for the senate finance committee, to which it was referred, is busy just now with NRA extension and veterans' bonus payment.

Speaker Byrns

Leading features of the measure as passed by the house are:

Grants to states for old age assistance (pensions) on a 50-50 basis, but for no individual will the federal government's share exceed $15 per month.

Compulsory old age benefits for persons over sixty-five on basis of salary earned during working lifetime, payments ranging from $15 to $85 a month. Income tax on pay rolls of employees starting with 1 per cent in 1937 and graduated upward to 3 per cent in 1949; excise tax on employers in same amounts. This will mean a total pay roll tax of 6 per cent by 1949.

Unemployment insurance. Tax on employer of 1 per cent on pay rolls in 1936, 2 per cent for 1937, and 3 per cent thereafter.

Social security board as new bureau of government in the executive branch with three members appointed by the President.

Federal grants to states for maternal and child health service, an appropriation of $3,800,000.

Federal grants to states for public health service, an appropriation of $8,000,000.

Speaker Byrns and other majority leaders were elated by the immense majority by which the bill carried because, as they asserted, it was put through without any pressure from the White House. Mr. Byrns said: "We got no orders from the President, so help me Almighty God."

GEN. HUGH JOHNSON'S earnest appeal for extension of the NRA, in the course of which he took all the blame for its failures, may have been effective, for it was reported that a considerable majority of the senate finance committee was in favor of continuing the life of the Blue Eagle organization. Three of the members, all Democrats, were listed as absolutely against prolongation of the recovery act, but most of the others favored such a course, provided various alterations are made. The committee had under consideration a bill introduced by Senator Pat Harrison, designed, he said, to stimulate discussion. The hottest battle will come on the floor of the senate.

GERMANY was thoroughly enraged by the action of the League of Nations council in adopting the tri-power resolution condemning the reich for violating the treaty of Versailles by rearming, and it was expected Reichsfuerher Hitler would make a defiant retort. As a first step he sent from his Bavarian retreat instructions to Secretary of State Von Buelow to protest "England's defection at Stresa and Geneva." This Von Buelow did, delivering the message to Ambassador Sir Eric Phipps for transmission to London.

Adolf Hitler

Then, on his forty-sixth birthday, came the reichsfuerher's defiance of the league, in the form of what the German foreign office called a "short but determined note." Here it is, as made public in Rome:

"The German government contests to the governments which in the council of the League of Nations took, in the deliberation of April 17, the right of making themselves judges over Germany. The government sees in the deliberation of the council of the league an attempt at new discriminations against Germany and therefore rejects it in the most resolute manner. The government reserves the right to make known soon its position on different questions touched upon in the deliberation."

This note did not seem to impress greatly the statesmen in London, Paris and Rome, but it mightily pleased Hitler's followers. They celebrated their leader's natal day with gusto and presented to him a fleet of about sixty war planes bought with popular contributions, most of which came from storm troopers.

RUSSIA was disappointed and disgusted when the French chamber failed to approve the mutual assistance pact which Litvinov and Laval had concocted. The delay was called officially a "temporary halt" in negotiations, and the treaty may be signed later provided the Soviet government promises to shut off the Communistic agitation in France. All the French radicals want the Russian alliance and so does one section of the conservatives; but another big group is opposed to any commitments, especialy with Russia. Also, there are many who still cling to the hope that Briand's old dream of a full Franco-German reconciliation may come true, though they don't say much about it in public.

Russian and French papers revived the story that there was a secret military alliance between Germany and Poland, but this was vigorously denied by officials in both Berlin and Warsaw.

Communist parties of ten European countries united in an appeal to the working classes for a demonstration on May 1 against the German Nazis. The appeal, printed in the Communist party organ Pravda, charged that "German imperialists and their Japanese and Polish allies" are provoking war against Soviet Russia.

MORE than three thousand persons lost their lives in a series of earthquake shocks that occurred in the most thickly populated section of Formosa, the island off the Chinese coast which Japan acquired in 1895. It was the worst disaster of the kind in the Orient since the Tokyo-Yokohama quake of 1923. The number of injured was estimated at fully 12,000, and a quarter of a million were rendered homeless. Property damage was placed at $28,000,000. Half a dozen sizable towns and many villages were completely destroyed, and fires and heavy rain added to the dangers and distress of the afflicted people. Water systems were ruined and there was fear of epidemics. The Red Cross and the Japanese army officials organized relief expeditions immediately but progress was slow because railway lines and roadways were destroyed, as were telegraph and telephone lines.

Formosa lies in the Chino-Japanese earthquake belt and has suffered severely from temblors in the past. It is mountainous and is separated from the mainland by a narrow strait. Its populace is mainly of Chinese origin.

SENATOR HUEY LONG delivered his much advertised attack on the President and the administration before a crowd that jammed the senate chamber. He was limited to 40 minutes, but in that time he used a lot of language. After describing Ickes, Farley, Wallace and General Johnson in terms not very funny, the "Kingfish" assailed Mr. Roosevelt as personally responsible for what he called a plan to force the state of Louisiana to yield to corruption and debauchery. He threatened a tax rebellion in his realm if there were further federal encroachments in the matter of controlling the expenditure of federal loans for state projects.

Senator Long

Huey charged that the administration was concerned solely with controlling the expenditures in Louisiana in such manner as to insure winning the election in 1936.

"They could go down there and spend the whole five billion and they could not win that election," he said. "But they could load us with the five billion debt that we would have to pay as the result of carrying on their politics."

FATHER COUGHLIN of Detroit, the "radio priest" and earnest publicist, has now been endorsed by the bishop of Detroit, Rt. Rev. Michael Gallagher.

"I pronounce Father Coughlin sound in doctrine, able in its application and interpretation," the bishop said. "Freely I give him my imprimatur on his written word and freely I give my approval on the spoken word. May both be circulated without objection throughout the land. Under my jurisdiction he preaches the just codes of the old law and its commandments. Until a lawful superior rules otherwise, I stand steadfastly behind this priest, Father Coughlin, encouraging him to do the will of God as he sees it and I see it."

The Michigan unit of Father Coughlin's National Union for Social Justice held its first meeting. The priest described this as the first of a series of state meetings to put the "millions of members" of the union "to work to make themselves felt as a democratic force."

REPUBLICAN leaders who attended a luncheon in Washington given to William Allen White of Kansas turned the gathering into a real political meeting and in their speeches insisted that the Republican party must openly and vigorously attack the "fallacies of the New Deal."

Mr. White explained the conception of the regional meeting of eleven midwestern states to be held in Kansas next month and said that the amount of interest aroused among Republicans throughout the country was surprising. Such a regional meeting could do nothing more than write a creed and stir up the electorate to right thinking, he declared, adding:

"Confronted with new conditions, the Republican party must face this situation and write a platform that will be constructive and give promise of carrying out in a sane way the things needed to restore constitutional government."

DAUGHTERS of the American Revolution, in their convention in Washington, had their usual exciting and hotly contested election for president general. The candidates were Mrs. William A. Becker of New Jersey and Mrs. Flora Myers Gillentine of Tennessee, and the former won by a vote of 1,436 to 619. Mrs. Becker was attacked by her opponents because she had endorsed "The Red Network," a book in which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Secretary of Labor Perkins and other members of the administration are listed as Reds.

OVER in Turkey the women, until recently, were forced to lead lives of seclusion in the harem and to go veiled when in public. But all that is changed. The other day the twelfth congress of the International Alliance of Women for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship opened in Istanbul with about thirty nations represented and Mrs. Corbett Ashby of England in the chair, and the women of Turkey, unveiled and in modish European garb, were the proud hostesses of the hundreds of delegates. Among the questions discussed were: The situation and rights of women; the position of women in the liberal professions; the political and civil rights of women; the means women can use to prevent war.

Under Kemal's rule the women of the republic of Turkey have been granted parliamentary and city votes and have entered enthusiastically into all branches of life, civic, professional, industrial and sporting.

KING BORIS of Bulgaria has foiled another attempt to force him from his precarious throne. Upon discovery of an alleged Fascist plot, he ordered that three prominent political leaders be arrested and held in jail. Their friends sought to free them by storming the jail but were repulsed. Those seized are Alexander Zanhoff, leader of the Democratic entente; Kozma Georgieff, head of the Macedonian party, and M. Natcheff, former police president of Sofia. The two first named are former premiers.

It was expected in Sofia that Premier Petko Zlatteff and his cabinet would resign and that King Boris would appoint as head of the new government Dimo Kazasoff, minister to Jugloslavia.

ALLEGED teaching of Communism in some of our universities and the adoption of that cult by a large number of half-baked young men and women in those institutions has long been debated and denounced by patriotic citizens. Student strikes and small riots have been frequent, and there have been many demands for the suppression of these reds and pinks. The latest big institution of learning to be brought into the limelight in this matter is the University of Chicago, whose faculty contains several decidedly radical instructors and its student body many youthful followers of Marx and Lenin. Because of charges made by a prominent drug store magnate the Illinois senate has just adopted a resolution calling for a "thorough and complete investigation" by a senatorial committee of five to determine whether any foundation exists for charges that "subversive Communistic teachings" are going on in "wholly or partly tax-exempt colleges and universities of this state."

The action of the senate followed within a few hours action by the house in passing almost unanimously a bill to require an oath of allegiance and obedience to the state and federal constitutions from all teachers and professors. The legislatures of other states are passing similar laws.

WHEN the administration's great work relief program gets under way one of the most important parts of it, the purchase of material supplies, will have to be started at once, and it expected that this will absorb about $1,700,000,000 of the total sum. According to authoritative sources in Washington, this part of the program will be supervised by Rear Admiral Christian J. Peoples, now procurement officer in the treasury. Peoples entered the navy supply corps in 1900 as assistant paymaster and later developed the navy's present purchasing system. When Franklin D. Roosevelt was assistant secretary of the navy he and Peoples became close friends.

Admiral Peoples

The admiral presumably will have full charge of drafting the regulations for material purchases but it is understood the actual buying of supplies for work relief projects will in most instances be handled by the states and other co-operating agencies. However, certain commodities, like cement, that will be needed in immense quantities, probably will be purchased centrally.

AMELIA EARHART, our premier woman aviator, made a fine flight from Los Angeles to Mexico City, though she was forced to light first 60 miles north of her destination because a small insect got in her eye. Removing the bug, she continued to the capital, where ten thousand persons gave her an enthusiastic welcome. Amelia said that after seeing something of Mexico, she "hoped to do a better job of flying nonstop to New York."

SENATOR HARRISON'S compromise bonus bill, it was believed, might solve that troubling problem.

This measure would make bonus certificates mature in 1938, instead of 1945. They could be converted immediately into 3 per cent bonds. Veterans who wanted cash right away could sell the bonds, losing only the interest they otherwise could obtain until 1938. Harrison said this would cost $500,000,000 more than the present bonus law, but far less than the Patman bill, passed by the house, to pay the bonus with $2,500,000,000 in new money.

Milo Warner, vice commander of the American Legion, said this bill was "absolutely not acceptable" to that organization. Heads of veterans' organizations and various others were invited to testify at committee hearings on the

It offers advantages not to be found in any other industry. The duties are, on the whole, less exacting and if you follow modern methods you make a fair return.

"Such goods and reputation as I have I have gained in working clothes, and am proud of it. Sitting here at my desk in a comfortable house on a farm near enough to the village to enjoy the benefit of social life and activities, I feel that I could have made no better choice than to stay here and farm.

"My land is clear of debt. It is returning an income sufficient for all necessary requirements. With a love of outdoor life, a farmer may lead a good life, and may read and ponder on all theories, all doctrines, without the haste, the trials, the prejudices that surround and mold the commercial and industrial life of America today."

Third, perhaps, of the stereotypes by which the farmer is represented to his fellow citizens in this Republic, the United States Department of Agriculture lately undertook a cure. The extension division sent out Ackerman, its best photographer, to bring in pictures of the most "representative" American farmers and their homes.

One of the men so photographed was Eugene Elkins, Route 1, Wakefield, Kan., and this is his reply to a questionnaire that the department, seeking further information, sent out:

1. How long have you lived in Clay county? How much land do you farm? "Was born here October 28, 1868. Have owned this farm since 1903 and lived on it since 1914. It contains 140 acres. Have other farm and pasture land. Never paid more than $115 an acre and never sold more than a foot of land in my life."

2. When did you start farming for yourself? Where? "I started in 1892, the year of the panic, when I was twenty-four. On a farm near here, which I still own."

3. What are your outstanding, up-to-date farm practices? "I just do a good thorough job of mixed farming and try to do things at the right time."

4. What outstanding farm and community improvements? "I would rather that my improvements, both indoors and out, speak for themselves."

He is a powerful, rugged man. He has done in his lifetime an immense amount of hard work. His hands are thick, heavy; the fingers, blunt. Yet when he parts the leaves to show you his best fruit, those hands move deftly, and there is something about them, too, which suggests a devout person handling the Bible.

"If you don't like farming," he says cheerfully, "there's nothing to it. I always did like to take care of things around a farm. My boy and I ship a load of cattle a year, as a rule, and two carlots of hogs. We sell some wheat, too, most years. But my main pleasure always has been in my lawn and house and garden, and in raising a hundred 'n one different little things, just to see what a fellow can do."

He led me to a loft room in one of the barns, where he was assembling his exhibit for the coming county fair. One year he showed eighty-three distinct varieties of plants, all raised on the place. He carries the key to that private shop and exhibit room in his own pocket, and leads you there with the delight of a boy.

"What's this?" he asked me, smiling. It was a bunch of thrifty cotton plants. "And these?" A serviceable maul and a pair of stout double-trees, made by his own hand from osage-orange trees grown on the place.

"It's just a sort of hobby," he said. "I always like to have something new.

"And I've always taken pride in having a nice home. We had our eye on this place a long time before we were anything like fixed to buy it. What caught our eye was the lawn and the white house with maple trees around it, and the green shutters. It looked to us just about the best place to live in the county, and we think so still. That fountain wasn't in when we got it, and the rose garden—we did that, too.

"Curious, isn't it, how many farmers never get around to making themselves a home? Just scraping to buy the piece of land next to them. Driving themselves and denying themselves, and telling themselves that some time, way off in the future, they're going way off somewhere—maybe to the coast—and have an awful good time!

"That doesn't seem right to me. Doesn't seem sensible. Our whole idea in farming is to take care of what we have, and enjoy it as we go along.

"My father was a miller in Vermont. He fought in the Civil war; five years. When it was over, he came out here, homesteading—I often think about it. Then came '74 and the grasshoppers drove us out. It drove out a quarter of the settlers, that year. Not many came back. But we did.

"There were eight of us children, all born in a log house. We rode bareback to school—a frame building, about fourteen by twenty, set up on the rocks; all open under. There would be as many as sixty-one scholars sometimes in winter. All the way from five to twenty-five years old. Three long benches; a low one in front for the little tackers; then a high one, for the older ones to write on, then another one for them to sit on. And a stove. And one teacher—but a good one. Sarah McNaughton was the first teacher I went to school to; she was fine. But the one I remember best was Jacob J. Jackson. He boarded with us, and got me to go on, more or less, with my books. There wasn't any high school in the county when I got through school. . . .

"We used to go barefoot all winter. Never had head colds either. The only thing that seemed to get us was contagious diseases, like diphtheria. When I was thirteen it went through the family and the three youngest died.

"I herded cattle from the time I was eight. Then I worked out quite a little. I worked for Henry Elias, the best farmer that ever farmed outdoors. When I was twenty-four, I bought my first farm; 160 acres, $14 an acre, $900 down. It was good river bottom, but I got hit by the panic.

"I batched it two and a half years. In 1895, the year I got married, I sold a load of cattle at $3.80 a hundredweight on the Kansas City market. I'd paid $15 a head for them. The price I got was 15 cents above the market that day; they were small cattle. That deal put me out of debt, and I haven't had what you could call any real trouble since."

On the questionnaire sent him by the Department of Agriculture, a space was left for "Anything Else You Consider Important." In this space Eugene Elkins wrote:

"My family, my home, my neighbors. The enjoyment I get from watching my crops and live stock develop. Our orchard, kitchen garden, vineyard, shade trees, flowers, rose garden, etc.

"I was married December 25, 1895. We have four children, three girls and a boy. The two eldest are married. The two youngest are attending Kansas State Agricultural college. (The other two went to college, too.)

"I have prospered beyond my wildest dreams. I have accumulated a million. But only a small part of this can be counted in dollars and cents. The rest of it comes from the satisfaction of seeing an unbroken country, dotted only here and there with the homesteaders' dug-outs, develop into a prosperous, settled country with beautiful modern homes. And the feeling that I have been a part of it."

Protection Impossible
The Railroad Crossings
Things Are Better
When Russia Is Rich

Europe seeks some network of "treaties" to prevent a war, or bind armies and air fleets of each of those signing such treaties to protect the others in case of attack.

Arthur Brisbane

Unfortunately, in the new war of the air, as in secret gangster war, no protection is possible.

Where one criminal has an "automatic" or "submachine gun," agreements among law-abiding citizens cannot protect them. And while one nation can secretly build and suddenly launch airships with poison gas and explosive bombs, no city can consider itself safe.

France and England, after elaborate experiments, announce that there is no possible way of protecting a modern city against air attacks, even though the city knew in advance when to expect them.

The only safeguard is fear of retaliation.

Deeply grieved by the killing of many school children at a public crossing, the President plans extensive elimination of railroad grade crossings. Complete elimination of such crossings would involve spending hundreds of millions or billions. The work would be undertaken with careful concentration on the fact that railroading itself is bound to change or disappear so far as transportation of passengers is concerned.

Railroads in the future must carry passengers more than one hundred miles an hour, on light railroad equipment, able to climb steep grades as easily as automobiles do now. Elimination of grade crossings will take that into consideration and include elimination of existing sharp curves at crossings, that the work may not be done twice.

Dun & Bradstreet, well informed usually, say that a big business rise is coming. Their weekly survey informs you that before the end of this quarter business progress will have developed to a degree beyond the most sanguine estimates offered at the beginning of the year.

How rich will the Russians become, with their energetic development of national resources, all over Russia and far into Arctic regions?

And what will be the effect on Communism, bolshevism and the proletariat when Russia becomes, as she may do, the richest nation on earth, and those that rule her become the world's richest men, perhaps the first multiple billionaires in history?

Expeditions sent into the Arctic have discovered coal, nickel, zinc, tin, copper, gold and oil, all inside the Arctic circle.

A regular line of freight ships has been established through the northwest passage, gigantic icebreakers going ahead of the freighters. Already Russia produces three times as much gold as the United States. What will be the psychological effect on Communism when Russia produces more gold than any other nation on earth?

Gambling in silver, made inevitable by this country pushing up the price, goes on all over the world; poor old China is buying back at double prices silver sold too cheap, and Britain must wish she had been in less of a hurry to unload below 30 cents an ounce the hundreds of millions of ounces taken from India, when India, in a foolish moment, was put on the gold basis, only to fall off again.

An old true saying tells you: "There is some good in all evil," and this applies even to the deadly venom of the cobra, or "hooded snake of India."

A full discharge of the cobra's poison into the human body means death, while the scientific use of that poison supplies a superior substitute for morphine in diminishing pain.

If you love your British cousins, rejoice. Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, says British income taxes will be cut because British finances show a substantial surplus. That surplus appears in spite of the fact that Britain is adding more than $52,000,000 to the cost of armaments.

Your satisfaction in this good news may be increased by your knowledge that the United States had the pleasure of financing the surplus and the additional armaments to the tune of $5,000,000,000 in war debts not paid.

Senator Wheeler of Montana has introduced a bill ordering the national government to take over, own and operate the railroads of the nation beginning January 1, 1936. There is no doubt that railroad stock and bond holders would say, "Amen," if they could be sure of getting a fair price for their property. Railroad management, naturally, would grieve. To give up power is always unpleasant.

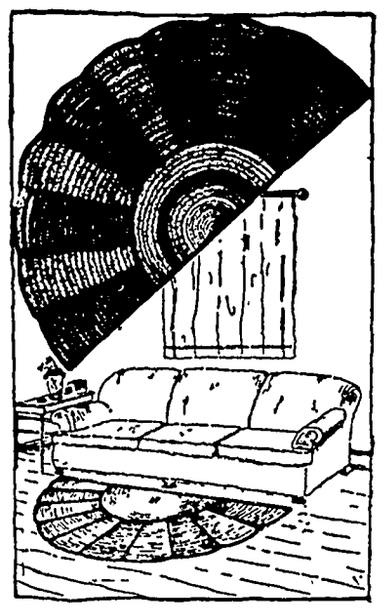
HIGHLY POPULAR "FAN" RAG RUG

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK



This "Fan" rag rug has attracted a lot of attention and to our knowledge quite a few home rug makers have made one or more like it. It must be seen to be appreciated. Made up in brilliant colors, the panels in alternating light and dark shades and the center of dark green and red, this rug is bound to catch the attention of anyone upon entering the room. This model measures 58 inches across and 30 inches deep, and requires about four pounds of material to crochet. The ten panels are made first and then crocheted together. The center half circle is made to fit opening for it and in turn is slip stitched into space.

This beautiful rug is one of the twenty handmade rugs shown in colors in rug book No. 24.

If handmade rag rugs interest you send us 15c for this book of rugs with instructions, and you will receive it by mail postpaid.

GENERAL STORE RESUMES PLACE IN COMMUNITY

The general store is coming back, according to the reports of wholesale grocers from the Middle West, but it is a different institution from that which had a prominent place in the earlier days of merchandising and community life.

No longer is the cracker barrel open, the pot-bellied stove is conspicuous by its absence, and the box, half filled with sawdust, that was a combination cuspidor and waste-basket, is no more, says the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch.

But in these newer general stores you can buy anything from a bottle of patent medicine to a postage stamp. To term them department stores is not correct, even though the atmosphere of the establishment in the old general store is gone.

The proprietors are in some cases men whose forebears were the storekeepers of the district in the days when houses and other buildings were made of the tough prairie sod.

The idea for small town merchandising needs is thus proven sound again. Not alone did the store supply the wants of the customers in the early days, but it was the forum of discussion on politics, religion and the state of life, manners and morals in the community in which the store was located. And the proprietor was as like as not to be the leader in community politics and in some cases religion.

Nowadays there are many other places where people may meet to discuss things. The movies provided the entertainment and the automobile the means to move about for wider horizons.

Yet many of the older generation would give a great deal to have the chance to spend a few hours again in that old general store they remember from the days of their youth.

LONDON, ENGLAND, PRINCIPAL MART FOR HUMAN HAIR

London is the world's central market for human hair, and a considerable business in this valuable commodity is carried on. Human hair comes to London chiefly from abroad, and is collected at the numerous hair fairs held on the continent. Dealers of all nationalities attend the famous hair fair at Limoges, for example, and they can tell at a glance the texture, quality, and market valuse of a woman's hair. Girls line up at the booths erected on the fair ground, and each in turn is offered a price for her hair. When a bargain is made, the buyer comes forward and crops the hair close to the girl's neck.

The greatest and most regular source of supply are the many convents in France and other European countries. When novices enter a convent their hair is shorn and sold at good prices. In some institutions the nuns are encouraged to promote the growth of their hair by the use of oils and massage, so that a regular "harvest" is reaped from time to time. The finest dark hair in the world comes from Spain, Italy and southern France, while fair hair is obtained from the women of Germany, Austria, Hungary, and Alsace Lorraine.

Prices for human hair vary. When the "shingle" and "Eton crop" were fashionable there was a glut of hair on the market, but now that so many women are wearing their hair long prices have risen considerably. Today a girl with long hair of best quality is sometimes paid as much as $40 for her tresses.

Oil From Rubber

The motorist of the future may be able to obtain his petrol and oil from old tires. Government chemists of the fuel research board have discovered that by compressing rubber and hydrogen at high pressure and high temperature—a process similar to that used for extracting oil and tar from coal—it is possible to produce either motor spirits or lubricating oil. In one experiment a temperature of 350 degrees centigrade was reached, and a quantity of pale yellow oil equal to about one-eighth of the bulk of the rubber was produced. At a higher temperature, 450 degrees centigrade, the scientists succeeded in obtaining a yield of motor spirit equal to half the amount of rubber used.—London Tit-Bits.

DO YOU KNOW?

That the Iowa Fish and Game Commission is very anxious to receive suggestions and opinions from interested sportsmen on all fish and game matters?

That there were 15,743 Federal Duck Stamps sold in Iowa during the 1934 season?

That women and boys under 16 years of age, resident of the State, are not required to have a fishing license?

That friends or relatives coming to Iowa can buy a 6-day non-resident fishing license for $1.00?

That 1,440 crows were killed by members of the North Central Iowa Rod and Gun Club, Mason City, Ia., during a recent crow hunt held by that organization?

That it is unlawful to use or train dogs for sport from March 15th to July 15th, this being the nesting season for all ground nesting birds?

POTS, PANS AND BRIDES

Pots and pans, while less glamorous than the bride's new sterling silver, have a glamour of their own, Mrs. Louise J. Peet, head of the Household Equipment Department at Iowa State College, believes.

Aluminum and iron pans are good, Mrs. Peet tells brides-to-be, because they heat evenly and retain the heat well. Thin aluminum should be avoided, however, since it dents easily and wastes fuel. Aluminum discolors with alkalies and will darken when used for boiling hard water.

Enamelware should be smooth and have an even coating of enamel. Enamel pans are valuable for cooking white sauce, custards and pie fillings, since the stirring necessary causes aluminum to discolor the product. The new, heavy, chip-proof enamelware largely eliminates chipping and cracking of the enamel.

Dark bottoms on either enamel or aluminum pans, it has been discovered, are slightly more efficient than light ones, especially with electric ranges.

Tight fitting covers for the pans are necessary for quick cooking and conservaton of fuel. A heat resisting handle, made of wood, and fastened securely to the pan by a metal shank, are good to have on equipment.

Duplict and triplicate pans, those which are divided into several sections, are particularly valuable in small families since a different food may be cooked in each compartment over a single burner.

HISTORY OF MOTHER'S DAY

Twenty-eight years ago, May 9, 1907, Anna Jarvis of Philadelphia, whose mother had died the year previous, dedicated that day as Mother's Day. A year later all Philadelphia observed the day—officially.

Appointing herself as a missionary of the idea, she interested influential men and women everywhere in the thought and on May, 10, 1913, the Congress declared the second Sunday in May a National Holiday—"dedicated to the best mother in the world—your mother."

Through the efforts of Miss Jarvis, Nine Countries celebrate Mother's Day this year. Sunday, May 12 is MOTHER'S DAY. And what better tribute to Mother than to attend church and honor her with gift.

Tuberculin Tests Given At School Without Cost

FUNERAL FOR AUG. RIDDER WILL BE FRIDAY

August Ridder, who has been seriously ill the past few weeks, died at his home in Klemme Tuesday evening.

Funeral services will be held from the Methodist Church Friday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock.

The obituary will be published next week.

COUNTY BANKERS MET HERE THURSDAY EVENING

The Bankers of Hancock County held their meeting at the First National Bank last Thursday evening and elected officers for the coming year, with Owen Conwell, Goodell, president; Neil Hanson, Kanawha, vice president; and H. H. Ollenberg, Garner, secretary and treasurer.

Following the meeting the wives of the local bankers served a nice lunch.

SCHOOL PUPILS TO RECEIVE TUBERCULIN TESTS

Nine Hancock county secondary schools will be included in a mass tuberculin testing project, starting May 13, it was announced here today by Mrs. Martha Bredbenner.

Approximately 1,000 students in the grades from seventh to twelfth will be given the tests. Every school in the county is included. Administration of the tests will be made by members of the Hancock Medical Society.

The survey is financed by funds procured through the sale of Christmas Seals in Hancock County and in part by a Federal grant. Other groups assisting are the boards of education in the various communities and the county American Legion Auxiliary unit.

Absolutely harmless and practically painless, the tuberculin test provides a simple but effective method of determining if infection is present in the body. The test is made by injecting a drop of fluid, called tuberculin, just under the outer layer of the skin. A negative reaction, which may be expected in about 90 percent of the students, leaves the skin perfectly normal. A positive reaction presents a reddened and slightly swollen area at the point of the injection.

A positive reaction does not necessarily mean that the child has active tuberculosis. but it is an indication that the student has been infected at some time through association with a case of open tuberculosis. To determine definitely whether disease is present, X-ray films are made of each positive reactor. These films, which will be made at a minium charge, accurately reveal in terms of light and shadows, the present significance and extent of disease, if it is present.

Rain

What does the word "rain" suggest? Is it something that always interupts our plans? To many of us it means just a great disappointment—having to stay home on account of the muddy roads.

Many of us do not stop to realize that if it was not for rain, our yearly income in communities like ours would have to depend on something else than the raising of crops.

This week we have seem a great amount of rain fall. Doesn't it suggest the idea that we will have an abundant crop and also a good possibility of destroying the insect pests?—L. S.

Other Thoughts On Rain

Rain can at times be the most depressing thing which can happen. At other times it can be the best and most cheering of things. There are some days which are darkened by a solid gray sky, and all it does is drizzle, drizzle, drizzle as though it would never stop. Many a time in the fall we have seen nothing but fog and rain for a week at a time, and at these times everyone feels morose, and moody, for there is no sun coming through to brighten things up. In the spring, however, especially in April, the rain and the sun take turn about; the grass becomes green; the flowers and trees begin to bud, and altogether things are very cheery. Everyone goes about whistling and singing, all because of the rain. Rain, therefore, has a great deal to do with how we feel and act. —Pete.

ASSEMBLY PROGRAM HELD WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

A May Day "Fight Tuberculosis" program was held at the school house Wednesday afternoon. The opening number was a clarinet duet by Carmen Kluckhohn and Milvern Barz. Then who should appear but the Radio Fan, Franklin Kluckhohn, who entertained the audience with his declamatory piece, which has become so well known in this part of the country. The third number given was a play by the seventh and eighth grades. The play was centered about a tuberculosis chart which was supposedly in a school room. The play was well given and should carry a lesson to all those who heard it. Last but not leasts was a talk given by Dr. Missman on fighting tuberculosis. All the schools in the county are having like talks and it is the hope of the American Legion Auxiliary and County Medical Association who are sponsoring these programs, to have everyone tested for T. B. The testing will be done by a local doctor on May 15th. Cards will be sent to all the parents which they are to sign if they wish their children to have the test. This test will be for children from the seventh grade up, and it is the hope of the school, and the Auxiliary to have everyone take the test.—Lyndon Kilgore.

MOST OUTSTANDING EVENTS OF THE YEAR

Now, that our school days are almost over for this year, we can think of the many outstanding events which will recall many times after our good old school days are over.

One event that stands out is the declam contest. We were proud of all our contestants and Franklin Kluckhohn went to the pre-district contest at Estherville.

The junior class gave the three-act play "Meet the Millionaire" the first semester.

The girls' and boys' glee clubs and the orchestra ranked well in the music contest at Britt in March. The glee clubs also gave an operetta "Jewels of the Desert."

There were a number of outstanding basketball games. We also had an interesting inter-class tournament.

Two successfuul carnivals were staged—one an athletic benefit. The other a band benefit.

To keep up interest in American government the juniors had a contest in which the boys competed with the girls. The girls proved themselves the more "brilliant" and were given a party in Goodell woods by the losers.

The senior play "Sound Your Horn" was given last week. Many of the important events, especially for the seniors are yet to come—the banquet, skip day, baccalaureate services, commencement and the school picnic.

SENIOR CLASS PLAY DREW LARGE CROWD

The seniors did very well with their class play "Sound Your Horn" which was given May 3 and 4. The parts for the different characters were well chosen and all acted their parts exceptionally well. A large crowd attended this play both Friday and Saturday nights. The proceeds were approximately ninety dollars. After expenses are deducted this money will be used for commencement expenses.

INQUIRING REPORTER

What Advice Would You Give To Next Year's K. H. S. Students?

Some advice I have to give to the next year's juniors is that when they want to put on a class play, if they put one on, is to learn their parts. You have seen what has happened to us. You want to be a happy and tough bunch like the juniors of 1935 if you expect to get anywhere.—Evert Barz.

Some advice I have to get rid of is that when you people are juniors be able to stand up and take it. Don't run away from things you did. When the teachers ask you a question whether you did this or that, don't lie; tell the truth. So the the juniors of 1935 hope to the sophomores of '35 good luck as juniors.—LaVern Hammitt.

Well, first of all, I'll advise the students with all the respect due them? Second, if you have to stay after school, don't tell them you will quit, because that is to old; think up a new one. Third, do not borrow or lend; it is a bad habit. Fourth and last, always get your Snglish in or you'll get a poor grade if you get one at all.—Graydon Back

The advice that I would give to next year's K. H. S. students would be to be more cooperative with the teachers in their studies and activities. I am sure that school would go along much more smoothly if each one of us tried to do these things.—Dolorys Cook.

I would advise them to come to school with the feeling of accomplishing something. This is the feeling many have, while others come to have a good time and get others into trouble. Another thing which the K. H. S. students could do is to cooperate more with the teachers than they do sometimes. I think if we all would cooperate we could have a much better school.—Gladys Meinders.

SHAMROCK BLARNEY

This week the juniors are again racking their brains for ideas, because they are gathering news for the paper.

The seniors are resting much easier after the performance of their class play.

The junior have finished reading plays, for a time being in English, and are now reading plays.

The junior boys were beaten, a fraction of a point, by the junior girls in the American government contest which has been raging the last semester. To celebrate our defeat we invited the girls; Miss Arends, our class advisor; and Mr. Hunter, our American government teacher to Goodell Woods for a weiner roast.

The seniors have been industriously practicing on their class play the past week.

The seventh and eighth grade children, from the country, took their County exams here Thursday and Friday. Their aims will be high as most of them are planning on coming to high school next year.

From the number of junior class meetings being held lately, it looks as if there will be a junior-senior banquet in the near future.

The juniors came to the rescue again this week and manufactured a few items for the Squealer. The editor, Bessie Larson, has been busy with the class play. Milvern Barz acted a manager this week.

AUXILIARY PRESENTS RADIO TO SCHOOL

We are now the proud possessors of a radio in our school which was presented to us by the American Legion Auxiliary. The machine is a six-tube Crosley and it will surely be useful in our school work and will afford us a great deal of pleasure too. The radio was formally presented by Mrs. P. W. Johnson at the senior play Friday night and was accepted by Mr. Hunter in behalf of the school.

At the same the radio was presented, two silk flag, an American flag and an Auxiliary flag were presented as a gift from Mrs. Paul Grange.

We certainly appreciate these gifts and say a hearty "Thank you" to the people responsible for them.

BUSTER JORGENSON INJURED AT BASEBALL PRACTICE

Buster Jorgenson has been very ill as the result of an injury received in baseball practice Monday night of last week. Buster was hit on the head by a pitched ball, but the injury did not seem serious in nature until a couple of days later. He was in school until the last period Tuesday afternoon. We missed him from classes the next two days, but most of us had no idea that the trouble had taken such a serious turn until the later part of the week. We are all very happy that the reports concerning him are so much more encouraging than they were Saturday and hope that he will be able to be back with us very soon.

DAIRY COWS ON PASTURE NEED GRAIN SUPPLEMENT

The generally poor condition of dairy cows this spring makes it important that pasture feeding be supplemented by a light grain ration containing 10 to 12 percent protein. Poor pastures and a general scarcity of feed during last year caused many dairy cows to be fed rations which did not contain adequate nutrients and it is quite impossible for cows producing more than 20 or 25 pounds of milk to build up or even maintain their body reserves on a ration made up entirely of pasture.

Even dry cows will use some grain to good advantage when on pasture. It will bring increased milk yield when the cows freshen.

A pound of grain to 5 or 6 pounds of milk, with some increase for the high testing cows, is an adequate amount of grain for cows on pasture. This is somewhat lower than the amount recommended for winter feeding.

CELEBRATED SCHOOL CLOSING WITH PICNIC DINNER

The Avery No. 3 School has completed a successful year of school and the event was celebrated by a picnic held Friday, which was attended by a large crowd.

The School, also known as the Riverside School, is beautifully located on the banks of the Iowa River south of Klemme, and is an ideal place for a picinc. Miss Irene Harms has been the teacher the past year.

An examination of the school records revealed that two pupils had perfect attendance for the past year: Evelyn Arnold and Evelyn Lewis.

James Hetherington, a tramp, must serve three months for throwing a cheese sandwich at a woman whom he asked for food.

ROOSEVELT'S RADIO CHAT IS OPTIMISTIC—VIEWS OF BUSINESS LEADERS.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
©, Western Newspaper Union.

HIGH optimism marked the "fireside chat" which President Roosevelt delivered over the radio to the people of America, which people, he said, are, as a whole, "feeling a lot better—a lot more cheerful than for many, many years." He asserted we are already on the unmistakable march toward recovery, and told how he means to promote the return to normal conditions with his works relief program. He promised to put to work three and a half million persons now on the relief rolls, and to press for enactment of legislation he considers necessary for carrying on the New Deal.

President Roosevelt

Only once did Mr. Roosevelt allude to such critics of his administration as Senator Long, Father Coughlin and Governor Talmadge. He said:

"The overwhelming majority of people in this country know how to sift the wheat from the chaff in what they hear and what they read. They know that the process of the constructive rebuilding of America cannot be done in a day or a year, but that it is being done in spite of a few who seek to confuse them and to profit by their confusion."

These six "fundamental principles," said the President, must guide the work relief program: Projects must be useful, most of the money must go for labor, "a considerable proportion of the costs" must be returned to the treasury, only those projects which can employ persons on relief will be approved, and projects will be approved in a given area in proportion to the unemployed in that area.

Admitting that graft will creep into such vast and speedy spending as his program calls for, the President asked citizens to help him make this "the most efficient and cleanest example of public enterprise the world has ever seen" and thus to give "a smashing answer for those cynical men who say that a democracy cannot be honest and efficient."

LEGISLATION which the President said, in his radio talk, should be enacted by congress immediately included the old age and unemployment insurance bill, the NRA extension bill, the public utility holding company bill, the transportation control bill, and the banking bill.

Here he comes into conflict again with the views of business leaders of the country. The National Association of Manufacturers has just issued its economic analysis of conditions, which says recovery is "within our grasp" and that the nation is closer to breaking the back of the depression than at any time for years, but asks that, in order to stimulate business, the administration and congress temporarily shelve as "disturbing" such legislation as unemployment insurance, the omnibus banking bill, the utility holding company bill, the 30-hour work week, the Wagner labor disputes bill, the Guffey bituminous coal measure and proposed changes in railroad laws.

Of tied-up capital, the analysis said this:

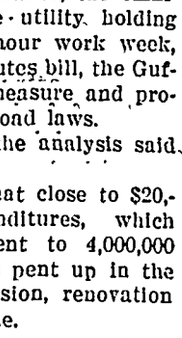
"Surveys indicate that close to $20,000,000,000 in expenditures, which would give employment to 4,000,000 men for two years, is pent up in the field of factory expansion, renovation and rehabilitation alone.

"The release of this flow of private capital by removing political uncertainties would dwarf the billions appropriated by congress for relief and make unnecessary the expenditure of much of the taxpayers' money."

This document was given out as the members of the United States Chamber of Commerce were gathering in Washington for their twenty-third annual convention, and naturally their speakers endorsed it and attacked much of the proposed legislation mentioned as unwarranted intrusion of the government into business.

Henry I. Harriman, who has been president of the organization for three years, retired from that office in favor of Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y. The new president is a banker and a farmer on a big scale.

HOW the New Dealers propose to redistribute wealth by double taxation of large estates is revealed by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau in a letter to Senator Pat Harrison, chairman of the senate finance committee. Mr Morgenthau outlines a plan of imposing inheritance taxes and also retaining the existing estate taxes, asserting this is in line with "our fundamental objectives." That this would result in the dissolution of large properties, the secretary recognizes, for he says:



Secretary Morgenthau

"To prevent the necessity of hasty liquidation of large properties in order to pay the tax, it might be provided that inheritance taxes be payable in a convenient number of installments."

The plan as outlined by Mr. Morgenthau is to impose graduated inheritance taxes on estates, with rates following those of the present income tax rates, which approximate 60 per cent on incomes of a million dollars or more. The present estate taxes have a maximum of 60 per cent over ten million dollars.

Thus there would first be a tax of 60 per cent upon the estate or gift, and then another tax of 60 per cent to be paid by those inheriting or receiving it. This would amount to a combined rate of 85 per cent on an estate of one hundred million dollars.

If all this money were handed out to the poorer people, even Huey Long might be satisfied.

PLANS for spending the $4,880,000,000 work relief fund are being made rapidly, parts of the general scheme being revealed to the public almost every day. The President will be the final arbiter but practically all the federal agencies will participate and three new ones have been announced by Mr. Roosevelt. These will handle rural rehabilitation, rural electrification and grade crossing elimination.

Frank Walker

Standing at the President's right hand is Frank C. Walker, former treasurer of the Democratic party. He has replaced Donald Richberg as chairman of the National Emergency council and is the head of a new division in that body known as the division of application and information. Under his direction all proposals will be sorted out and data on them from various government units will be co-ordinated. Then they will be handed on, with Mr. Walker's recommendations, to a new works allotment board which is headed by Secretary Harold Ickes. These two additions to the alphabet groups in Washington are known as DAI and WAB.

Mr. Roosevelt also announced the appointment of Federal Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins as chief of a works progress division. He will pick workers, fix wages, purchase materials and generally supervise projects.

In a press conference the President named these eight types of work which will be undertaken, with the amount of money to be spent on each:

1. Highways, roads, streets, grade crossing elimination, and express highways, $800,000,000.

2. Rural rehabilitation, relief in stricken agricultural areas, water conservation; water diversion, irrigation, reclamation, rural industrial communities, and subsistence homesteads, $500,000,000.

3. Rural electrification, $100,000,000.

4. Housing, low cost housing in rural and urban areas, reconditioning, and remodeling, $450,000,000.

5. Assistance for educational, professional, and clerical persons and other "white collar" unemployed, $300,000,000.

6. Citizen Conservation corups, $600,000,000.

7. Sanitation, soil erosion, stream pollution, reforestation, flood control, rivers and harbors, $350,000,000.

8. Loans, grants, or both, to cities, counties, states, and other political subdivisions for public works, $900,000,000.

The rural rehabilitation work will be directed by Rexford G. Tugwell, under-secretary of agriculture, and he will not be responsible to Secretary Wallace but will have a free hand to carry out his schemes for moving families from marginal lands, shifting stranded rural communities and building cities outside of large urban centers to relieve slum congestion.

Appointment of Mr. Walker leaves Mr. Richberg free, as the President said, to devote his time to the NRA during the period of pending legislation in congress, and litigation in the Supreme court.

HAVING listened to Senator Long of Louisiana and other orators who do not like the administration and its New Deal and also have little love for the G. O. P., the National Farmers' Holiday association, in session at Des Moines, Iowa, decided that a third national political party should be formed.

Milo Reno

Milo Reno, national president of the association, had a lively encounter with a group of alleged Communists during a business session. They sought adoption of a resolution calling for legislation for "relief without debts," "production credit without strings," and immediate repeal of the AAA. Reno denounced them as Wall Street racketeers and henchmen of Soviet Russia.

"You can't talk. You can't argue. Don't try to get the floor. I'm running this meeting," Reno said. "Sit down and shut up. Get out before we get really mad."

REPUBLICANS of nine midwestern states who met at Excelsior Springs, Mo., decided that the "grass roots" conference of leaders of the party should be held in Springfield, Ill., the date to be fixed later, though it probably will be early in June. The purpose of this gathering will be the rejuvenation of the party and the launching of a campaign to restore popular government. The nine states participating, which will name delegates, are Illinois, Iowa, Indiana, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Wisconsin and Oklahoma.

ORGANIZED labor opened its attempt to obtain recognition in the automobile industry with a strike of workers in the Toledo plant of the Chevrolet Motor company. The factory was closed down immediately, though only a part of the force joined in the strike. Union pickets were placed about it, but city police and deputy sheriffs were on hand to see that there was no disorder.

President Sloan of General Motors corporation issued this statement in New York:

"The vital question involved is whether General Motors corporation is willing to sign an agreement for a closed shop recognizing the local union as the exclusive representative of all the employees of the Toledo plant. This General Motors will not do."

The union, in a lengthy statement, said its committee "has done everything in its power to meet with the management and to secure an amicable and fair adjustment of the matter of wages, hours and union recognition and various other grievances.

"The management refused to sign a contract of any kind and flatly refused every section of the proposed contract with the exception of two minor points."

The company offered to make wage readjustments and give a 5 per cent general wage increase, show no discrimination against union men, and agreed to respect seniority rights as provided by the automobile labor board.

Leo C. Wollman, chairman of the National Automobile Labor board, reported that that body had completed a canvass of 163,150 workers in American automobile plants and found that 68.6 per cent of them showed no affiliation with any labor organization. The various employees' associations grouped together ranked second with 21,774 members, equal to 13.3 per cent of the total. The American Federation of Labor was third with 14,057, or 8.6 per cent, while the Associated Automobile Workers of America were fourth with 6,083, or 3.7 per cent.

GEN. W. W. ATTERBURY, veteran official of the Pennsylvania railroad, has retired as president of the company eight months before that would have been necessary under its regulations, because of ill health. The directors unanimouly elected Martin W. Clement to succeed him. The new president of the great system was born 53 years ago in Sunbury, Pa., and entered the service of the road in 1901 as a rodman. His promotion was steady and nine years ago he became the vice president.

M. W. Clement

General Atterbury had this to say of his successor:

"Since he became vice president, Clement has been intimately associated with me in conducting the company's affairs and in our relations with the other railroads and with the government.

"The remarkable results achieved by the company last year, one of the most difficult periods the railroad has ever experienced, were largely due to Clement's leadership. His manifest capabilities have commended him not only to his associate directors and officers, but also to the executives of other railroads with whom he has been working in recent years in the interest of the railroad industry as a whole.

"Moreover, he enjoys the confidence, respect and co-operation of the entire Pennsylvania railroad organization."

GERMANY'S latest breach of the treaty of Versailles, the building of submarines, is stirring up a lot of angry talk in Great Britain, France and Italy. The English are especially disturbed, for they remember only too vividly how near the Germans came to starving them during the war by the destruction of shipping by the undersea boats. Anglo-German conversations on naval restriction were to have been held in London the second week in May, and these may now be called off or at least postponed.

The French are less vexed because they think the development may force a showdown on the whole status of the German navy and Hitler's demand for at least 35 per cent of the British tonnage and approximate parity with that of France. Naval experts in Paris said the disclosure might "well prove of inestimable benefit for military France in awakening naval Britain to the dangers of Hitler's armaments policy."

Information obtained by the powers was that Germany already had under construction a number of 250-ton submarines and planned a large fleet of them. Spokesmen for the German government denied that any were being built yet, but at the same time admitted that submarines were being "considered" in connection with plans for rebuilding the navy.

The League of Nations council appointed a committee to study what action should be taken if Germany violated the peace treaty again, so observers are interestedly waiting to see if the matter will be taken up at the council meeting on May 20.

AMBASSADORS of the United States, Chile, Peru, and Argentina delivered to the Brazilian government a collective note asking Brazil to participate in efforts to end the Paraguay-Bolivia war in the Chaco by mediation. Brazil rejected such an invitation some time ago because she had been unintentionally excluded from a projected Chaco economic conference.

The two warring nations were engaged in a long and very bloody battle, the outcome of which was still undecided.

Watch Your Eye-Lens
Frightened to Death
All Possess Language
Eating Bark and Earth

Important news for life insurance companies. A tendency to old age or early death is inherited, according to Dr. Felix Bernstein of Columbia university, who talked to the National Academy of Science in Chicago. A scientist can tell how old you are, physically, by examining the lens of your eye. It always shows signs of hardening before fifty; the extent of the hardening decides how old you really are.

Arthur Brisbane

The rest of your body—brain, heart and all the rest—grows old about as rapidly as the eye-lens does.

Leaving out accidents and attacks by disease germs, there is a sort of "pre-destination" in the length of life.

Two brothers, fifteen and ten years of age, with a young friend, were going to an entertainment last Christmas night. George Bond and Carl McMurty of Poplar Bluff, Mo., thought it would be amusing to frighten the children by running after them, telling them, "You will never live to get there."

The two older boys "got there." The little ten-year-old boy, James Ainley, dropped dead of fright as the men pursued him. A sensible jury decides that the two men shall spend six months in jail and pay $100 fine for their "joke." The jury might well have made it ten years, for it was stupid manslaughter. There is nothing more brutal, cruel or more completely worthy of a genuine "yahoo" than frightening children.

Secretary of Interior Ickes, who also possesses the gift of forcible speech, calls Senator Long "a ranting demagogue," describes, more gently, one other well known broadcaster, and rebukes, without mentioning his name, Doctor Townsend, whom he accuses of arousing false hopes in the "underprivileged."

Senator Huey Long, his language never failing him, able to speak his mind freely in the senate, addressing that august body, describes the secretary of interior as "Lord High Chamberlain Ickes, the chinch-bug of Chicago."

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace he called the "Lord Destroyer, the ignoramus of Iowa."

We complain of our depression with good cause. We might find queer consolation in reading about miserable inhabitants of Formosa, property of Japan, inhabited chiefly by Chinese, who made up 80 per cent of the sufferers and victims in the recent earthquake.

In Formosa, men, women and children have been stripping the bark from elm trees and eating it and they may be seen on barren fields, pulling up wild grass by the roots, washing and eating the roots, as well as the grass itself. Many have died from eating bran mixed with earth and water, the earth causing death by intestinal stoppage.

Those poor creatures have a real depression, with no rich government to pour out billions for jobs, relief, dole, etc.

The American Philosophical society, gathered in Philadelphia, learns from Doctor Slipher, director of the Lowell observatory at Flagstaff, Ariz., that to people on the planet Mars, if any are there, our earth is a blue planet.

If those Martians will continue watching us, until some European or Asiatic country sends a few thousand planes in our direction, they will see this corner of the earth a deeper and darker blue than ever. What a lesson, we shall learn some day if we continue with our eyes shut!

Newspaper editors, that ought to know something about prosperity, gathered in New York from all over the country, tell you they see a "business pickup," better times are coming. That is a cheerful prediction.

Some boys in high schools, and bigger boys in colleges, recently organized a "strike" to express their horror of war.

War is horrible; it should be, and eventually will be, unnecessary. But there is some good in all evil, and young students and others should reflect on past wars and what modern civilization owes to them.

Germany wants colonies, and is embarrassed by the fact that this would mean taking in a great many black ladies and gentlemen that by no stretch of the imagination could be called "Aryans." The German government announces that, while it could not admit negroes to German citizenship, as Britain does in her colonies, black colonial negroes would be "Schutzbefohlene," with every right except the right to adopt Aryan strut.

Dental Hygiene

The Road to Health

By DR. R. ALLEN GRIFFITH

TEETH AND VANITY

TWENTY-FIVE or thirty years ago it was considered quite the thing to have diamonds set in the teeth. About the same time, too, even some of our own American people had gold crowns put on their front teeth to add to their attractiveness. A little later, several American dentists did a land office business in old Mexico grinding down the front teeth of the peons and putting gold crowns on them. Many of these peons would spend their last dollar for a gold crown. And these were nearly always put on perfectly sound teeth.

The mouth is the most expressive organ of the human body. What is more attractive than smiling lips with a perfect set of clean, white teeth? Most people could have beautiful teeth if they would only give them the necessary time and attention. My lady sometimes spends a fortune for a string of pearls and neglects the real pearls which are in her mouth. Teeth, carefully polished and free from decay, have much of the sheen of the pearl, and should be far preferable.

Teeth are the first organ of digestion Poorly chewed food places an enormous strain on the digestive system. Not only does the person lose much of the food value, but serious digestive disorders may result.

The average individual does not realize the value of either teeth or health until they are lost. Then he makes frantic efforts to regain what is too frequently gone forever, when a little prevention in the beginning would have preserved both.

Vanity, alone, should prevent the very absurdities noted above. Even the loss of a single back tooth will show in a photograph. The teeth form a perfect arch and any single tooth removed from that arch will cause a change in its form. In the same way, should a brick or a stone be allowed to distintegrate in an architectural arch, it will cause the arch to gradually collapse.

Porcelain teeth are made nowadays to take the place of teeth "lost" from any cause. The art of "dental ceramics" has reached a stage where the artificial is hard to tell from the natural. Vanity is unquestionably the cause of this high degree of perfection, but no artificial tooth is ever as good as the natural.

It is perfectly natural for every normal human being to want to look as well as possible, and vanity alone should teach them to care for their teeth in time and to keep them clean.

TEETH AND SELF-RESPECT

MANY a man takes a bath and changes his collar every day and wears the latest style clothes, while his teeth cry aloud: "Give me a bath and take me to the dentist."

Go where you will, there is a continuous parade of irregular, elongated, unkempt teeth. Of those who visit the dentist, very few do so because they sincerely believe that sound, clean teeth are conducive to lengthening their lives. Most men visit the dentist because they are driven to him by pain or pride. Few people think of their health until they are sick.

As the physician and dentist see things today, there will be far less surgery and sickness when the full knowledge of modern preventive medicine and dentistry become fully known throughout the world. The average duration of human life has been increased many years during the last half century. This has come about more through the protection of the people by public health laws and the saving of children than through the knowledge and use of drugs.

Concerning the diseases of children, it used to be thought necessary for children to have diseases that are now largely prevented by quarantine. We know, too, now, that these unnecessary diseases leave their scars according to the seriousness of the infection. Scarlet fever breaks down an enormous amount of the surface of the kidney, the chronic infections do the same thing in a small way. We cannot afford to "have" our children suffer these handicaps.

Bad drinking water is probably one of the most common and dangerous carriers of disease. In our cities millions of dollars have been spent to insure pure drinking water, but we are just beginning to spend anything to keep clean the child's mouth.

This great advance in the prevention of the diseases wherein dentists are so much interested is the knowledge that acute, special, local and chronic diseases such as neuritis, sciatica and acute paralysis come from mouth infections in the majority of instances. We are also coming to believe that appendicitis, diseases of the gall bladder and ulcerated stomachs may be caused by bacteria in the capillary circulation at the base of mucous cells. Another prime cause is local infections.

We find foci of infections in the tonsils, in pyorrhea, in cavities in the teeth, in abscesses at the roots of the teeth. All of these foci of infection may be prevented by keeping the mouth clean and healthy.

Can we not change our attitude from one of neglect to one of self-respecting care?

Plan Pharos of Columbus

Move to Create Monument to Great Sailor in World He Discovered; Island of Havti Selected as the Most Appropriate Site.

Some brief descriptions have come down to us about one of the Seven Wonders of the ancient world, the Lighthouse of Alexandria.

It was built on the island of Pharos in the harbor and was connected with the city by the Seven Furlong bridge. Accounts placing the height of its tower at 600 feet are believed to be overdrawn and 400 feet is regarded as more probable. Built by Sostratus of Cnidus, it was begun under Ptolemy I of Egypt and was finished under Ptolemy II, its cost being placed at 800 talents, which by some valuations might be the equivalent of as much as $1,600,000.

From the Pharos of Alexandria is traced an addition to languages and an influence on lighthouse and also on other architecture. The word Pharos came to be applied to lighthouses generally and with some change in spelling is of common usage in certain modern tongues, while pharology became a technical term for lighthouse building. The first of the lighthouses in western Europe, built by the Romans, was called the Pharos of Dover, while the minarets of Mohammedan mosques symbolize lighthouses and in the earlier ones we possibly may see what their model, the original Alexandria structure, looked like. Some influence on the steeples of Christian churches is discerned by writers.

An example of special dignity and worthiness is accordingly followed in elaborate plans for creating, in the western hemisphere, a like wonder of the modern world in a monument to Christopher Columbus. Its site will not be at any modern Alexandria—at any of the great ports of the New world he discovered, but on the island of Hayti, on which he landed during his very first voyage, where he established the first American colony and where his remains were buried in 1536, 30 years after his death. During the partial occupany of that island by Americans of late the project has been advanced to a stage where success seems certain.

If the plan is carried out as contemplated, no other undertaking will be representative of the New world in as complete a sense, for it is proposed that every western national government, large or small, shall contribute to its $2,000,000 cost. A design for a noble structure has already been made, embodying special precautions against a Caribbean peril, the original Pharos having been destroyed by an earthquake in the Thirteenth century.

To some it will seem important to know whether the remains of Columbus still rest in the ancient cathedral of Santo Domingo, in the island's second republic, and some recent works of reference print as authoritative the version of the Spanish government as to their removal years ago. The bare statement that the wrong tomb was opened and the bones of one of Columbus' sons taken away, and not those of Columbus himself, does not seem very convincing, but if the data preserved by those called in as observers during an examination at the cathedral some years ago are accurate, a mistake was made by the Spanish. Insignia, lettering, other small evidences indicated that the tomb which had been opened was undoubtedly that of the son and that another tomb now holds the few fragments of Columbus' bones and the observers were men of intelligence, including high ecclesiastics, officials and others.

But whether or not their opinion was correct, this is an appropriate site for many other reasons, and what could be a more appropriate form for a monument to the greatest navigator of all than a splendid pinnacle carrying a perpetual light for the guidance of his successors on the seas? This will be more than a flame seen afar for directing those who ply the ocean. It is also designed for those plying the upper air. Aviation is now farther advanced than was the lore of the sea in Columbus' time. Probably air routes along the short parallels of latitude in the inclement North will always be followed, but distance is much less important than safety to aviation, making miles by the hundreds in an hour.

May we not believe that the favorite routes of the future will be along the warmer, milder, safer parallels to our southern ports; that the skies to be "whitened" by flying craft will be skies to the south and that the Pharos of Columbus, looked for by many an eye on dark nights and stormy nights, will be a wonder and preserver vouchsafing in the Caribbean blessings to the imperiled greater even than those of its predecessor of the Mediterranean.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A POSTAL "BELLY-ACHE"

Uncle Sam has been doing considerable howling the past few years because of a deficit in postal receipts, claiming that the expenses far exceeded the income. To cure this the Postal Department smacked a cent raise on the price of first class mail, but this did not bring the desired results.

Then the chain letter fad got started on the west coast and rapidly spread all over the United States. Did the Postal Department welcome the vastly increased business? They did not. They sat and belly-ached that the "racket" was illegal, that it was a lottery, that it was against the rules of the postal regulations. Did the people stop? They did not. The chain has spread so rapidly that nearly everyone's name is now on one or several letters.

We can't see where it is hurting anybody, and surely it is bringing in a large revenue to the postal department. so why should Uncle Sam belly-ache about it.

Any man in business would welcome such an avalanche of prosperity.

—And the chain continues, so what?

Daniel Boone's Hair Was Pulled Out by Indians

In 1769 what is now Kentucky was an unexplored wilderness, and Daniel Boone was hired by a syndicate of Virginians and Carolinians to lay the course of empire westward into a land which he described as being thick with buffaloes. He thus became the pathfinder in the mighty trek to the West, observes a writer in the Kansas City Star. And the Cherokees were "persuaded" by long rifles to sell all of Kentucky and most of Tennessee to the frontiersman's employers, for 14,000 British pounds—in money and trade goods. Boone, at the head of some thirty stalwart axmen, cut the Great Wilderness road through from Kentucky to the East, where, in his tracks, the wheels of the empire builders were to leave their ruts. And the first important settlement became, in Boone's day, Boonesborough, on the site of Transylvania fort, built by Boone.

Daniel Boone was considered by his contemporaries "an instrument ordained by God to settle the wilderness." But most of his settling was done with a rifle; he was, in fact, for most of the settlements, a one-man defense against the Indians, and, it appears, an effective one. During the Revolution, Indian forays against the settlers, frequently led by British officers, were repulsed time and again by Boone and his pioneers. In 1778 a party led by Boone on a salt-hunting expedition was captured by Indians and taken to Detroit. All save the leader were exchanged or ransomed. A Shawnee chief took a fancy to Boone and adopted him. The ceremony of adoption consisted in pulling out all of his hair except a thick scalplock.

Pillar Box Sign Gained Fame for the Inventor

There are many ways of becoming famous, writes the Paris correspondent of the London Sunday Observer. That earl of Sandwich who first ate meat between two pieces of bread put his name into every mouth, and the Parisian printer, of English extraction, who set up upon the pavements those round constructions, three times as wide as a London pillar box and twice as high, and used them for the display of theatrical advertisements which were illuminated at night from the under-edge of a projecting circular roof, not only established what has become one of the most characteristic features of the Paris landscape, but made his name live.

For these pillars were for many years, and sometimes still are, called "collennes Morris." It is more than fifty years since the first of them made its appearance.

First Permanent Settlements

The exact dates and places of the first permanent settlements in the 13 original states are often difficult to determine, as authorities differ. The following are generally accepted: Connecticut, Windsor, 1633, English; Delaware, Wilmington, 1638, Swedes; Georgia, Savannah, 1733, English; Maryland, St. Marys, 1634, English; Massachusetts, Plymouth, 1620, English; New Hampshire, Portsmouth, 1623, English; New Jersey, Elizabethtown, 1617, Dutch; New York, New York, 1613, Dutch; North Carolina, Albemarle Sound, 1653, English; Pennsylvania, Chester, 1638, Swedes; Rhode Island, Providence, 1636, English; South Carolina, Ashley River, 1670, English; Virginia, Jamestown, 1607, English.

The Moffat Tunnel

The Moffat tunnel pierces the Rocky mountain at the so-called Continental divide, in Grand and Gilpin counties, Colorado. It is on the line of the Denver & Salt Lake railway, with its eastern portal 50 miles west of Denver, and it shortens by 23 miles the traveling distance. The bore, 32,150 feet long, begun in 1923 and holed through on February 18, 1927, was opened to train traffic in February, 1928.

Bombay

Bombay, one of India's gateways, is a modern, throbbing city housing a varied population. Kipling called it "India's Queen of Cities." It is a modern city with splendid public buildings. Majority of States Do Not Record Their Births

Since early modern times registries of births, marriages and burials have been kept with more or less regularity by the church authorities in the chief European countries. Though generally regulated by law, such registries, until the Nineteenth century, lacked uniformity, and for statistical purposes are of restricted value.

By the middle of the Nineteenth century most of the nations of Europe had enacted legislation prescribing in detail rules for registration; for a birth, date and place, together with age, nationality and occupation of the parents. The attending physician or other person present, is required within a specified time to provide requisite information.

Failure to comply with this provision is attended with heavy penalties. In the United States general registration laws are in force in less than one-third of the states, although nearly all the large cities now keep such registry. One of the most stringent of state laws on the subject is that of Connecticut. Responsibility for making certificates is placed upon the physician or other person attending, and failure to comply with the law is punishable by a fine. Registrars knowingly making false entries may be fined or imprisoned, and any person falsely certifying to a birth, may be fined or imprisoned.

The subject of registration does not fall within the scope of federal legislation. In 1903, however, congress passed a resolution urging the necessity of uniform registration, and requesting the states to enact the necessary legislation.—Indianapolis News.

Early Americans Built Churches by Lotteries

Lotteries, under ban by federal law, once flourished in Philadelphia, "cradle of American liberty," observes a United Press writer.

Dating as far back as 1753, churches used "public gambling" as a means to raise money for a new steeple, clock tower, or whatever was needed.

Probably the first sanctioned public lottery was the one inaugurated by Benjamin Franklin and his friends to build an "Association Battery" as protection aganst feared attacks during the early British-French clashes. Tickets were sold for 40 shillings each.

Popularity of the "gambling" became so great that by 1790 lotteries were being held in all sections throughout the Philadelphia area.

At the outbreak of the Revolutionary war the thirteen states, sorely in need of money to finance their armies and fight for independence, sanctioned lotteries and congress authorized printing of 100,000 tickets.

Some of the more important lotteries before and during the Revolution were: For 3,000 pieces of eight to finish St. Paul's Episcopal church; to raise £500 to finish Trinity church, Oxford; to raise £6,000 for the New Jersey college, which later became Princeton university; and to raise £3,000 to build a lighthouse at Cape Henlopen and improve navigation in the Delaware.

The Ring-Tailed Cat

The beautiful little mammal, the Bassaris, commonly known as the ring-tailed cat, is a cousin of the raccoon, according to a writer in the Los Angeles Times. Bassariscus astutus is a strange elfin creature of many unusual names; such as, the "coon-cat," the "band-tailed cat," the "raccoon-fox," the "cacomixtle" of Mexico, and the "Babissurl" of Lower California. But inasmuch as this little animal seems to possess the face and ears of a fox, the eyes of a lemur, the paws of a cat, the body of a pine marten, and the tail of a raccoon with its seven black rings, the Bassaris might be called anything.

Most Famous Book of Jokes

The most famous book of jokes in all history was the "Chapbook of Till Eulenspiegel," a renowned German clown and jester who lived in the Fourteenth century. For more than 400 years this book was published in many languages, among them being Dutch, French, English, Latin, Danish, Swedish and Polish. There have been more than 20 French editions, and reprints of it appeared in London as late as 1890.—Collier's Weely.

Take No Chances on Bulls

In the Basque village of Hendaye in the south of France, the natives believe that discretion is the better part of valor, says the Detroit News. Once every year the local Carmens gather on the balconies to cheer the Hendaye version of the bullfight. Several young bulls are let loose on the street while everybody closes shop, and safely ensconsed in barrels, the young matadors waggle red hankeys at them.

Sun Dangerous to Eyes

While sunshine is remarkably beneficial with its untold healing powers it can be a dreadful strain on the delicate optical organs, making the eyes dull, tired and wrinkled. Daily exercise and bathing of the eyes is advocated as a beauty and eye-health measure.

Suicide by Will-Power

Certain iguana lizards of the West Indies seem to be able to commit suicide simply by willing to do so, it was reported by Dr. Paul Bartsch, biologist of the Smithsonian institution. These creatures, when captured alive and unhurt, often die within a few minutes and without any trace of injury.

Nickname of "Bomba" Was Given to Ferdinand II

Ferdinand II, by the grace of God, king of the two Sicilies, Jerusalem, etc., duke of Parma, Placenza, etc., Hereditary, etc., etc., for all his resounding titles was one of the most thoroughly hated of the petty kings and princes who ruled the various independent states which were joined together in the early '60s to form the present kingdom of Italy, writes R. A. Barry, in the New York Herald Tribune.

The two Sicilies, the island of that name and the neighboring southern portion of the Italian mainland with Naples as its capital, had existed as a dual kingdom from the days of the Crusades, subject at different times to Norman, Austrian or Spanish dominion. The kingdom had, after the Napoleonic wars, been reassigned to the younger branch of the Spanish Bourbons, and it was under the misrule of these reactionaries that the Sicilies passed their final years as a separate kingdom.

Once, in 1847, a rebellion broke out on the Island of Sicily and for a time appeared to be succeeding, for Ferdinand granted a constitution, but he soon regained the upper hand and by wholesale treason trials soon had every important citizen who had any part in the rebellion either in exile or in jail.

During the rebellion, he had vindictively ordered the bombardment of the defenseless cities of Messina and Palermo, which act earned him the derisive nickname "Bomba" and, although his stern and repressive measures had thoroughly quelled the spirit of revolt and instilled a feeling akin to terror in the people, he could not recall the name and under it he was loathed and hated to the end of his reign.

Moon Is Blamed for Many Impossible Afflictions

The idea that the moon upsets wireless programs would be more in keeping with its old reputation than the discovery of its usefulness to fishermen. For most of the things our ancestors believed about the moon were pretty unpleasant, says Answers Magazine.

They thought, for instance, that to sleep in the moon's rays was to invite blindness or other troubles, and coined the word "moonstruck" to describe those who were mentally deranged. "Lunatic" also comes from the Latin word meaning moon.

And while they also believed in the moon's influence on fish, their view was much more pessimistic than that of the fisheries experts. They thought that at certain times the moon made fish unfit for food.

The moon, in short, was regarded with a good deal of suspicion. Perhaps this was partly due to its association with black magic and paganism. The witches believed that the herbs which they used in their incantations, or from which they brewed poisons to kill their enemies, had to be gathered while the moonbeams fell on them.

Florence Nightingale

One of the world's greatest statisticians, says Doctor Walker, was Florence Nightingale. Few people realized that the Lady of the Lamp started her nursing career by pestering the British admiralty with facts and figures in carefully planned graphs of needless death and suffering on the battlefield. Without her statistical ability the world might never have learned of the angel of mercy. In her day she was called "the passionate statistician." She became thoroughly hated by the government before she was given the opportunity to become universally beloved.

Tears Kill Germs

Science rises impersonally to defend tears, and says of them: Tears kill germs. The secret of tears seems to be a chemical of the class called "enzymes," like the pepsin which aids digestion in the stomach by splitting some of the complicated substances of meat into simple chemicals, which the body can absorb. A new "enzyme" in tears, reported by Dr. Karl Meyer, Prof. Richard Thompson and two associates in the department of opthalmology at Columbia university, seems to have a similar power to split up and dissolve the sticky, gumlike substances in mucus secretions.

Neat Ship Surgery

A neat trick in ship surgery was done by England during the war, two of its destroyers of the same class—the Zulu and the Nubian—bumped into mines and were damaged beyond repair, the former losing her bow and the latter her stern. So they were cut in half and the good bow of the Nubian was welded to the good stern of the Zulu, and the "new" ship was named Zublan. —F. T. Bell, Glenside, Penn., in Collier's Weekly.

Where Iodine Comes From

About 90 per cent of the world's iodine is produced by Chile. This drug is a by-product of the nitrate industry. Twenty years ago Chile supplied 75 per cent of the total volume of nitrogenous fertilizers to the whole world, but because of synthetic processes carried on in the United States and Europe, this proportion has shrunk to 15 per cent.

Story in Dungeon Stones

Carlisle castle, in Scotland, still bares to travelers the stones in its dungeons recalling the suffering of the Jacobites imprisoned there. Mary, Queen of Scots, was imprisoned in the castle for a time and King David I died there.

Australian Sheep Dogs Headed by Kelpie, Barb

It is difficult to convince the Australian or the New Zealand shepherd that the work of all herding dogs is about alike. He prefers to believe that none of the wonderfully trained German, Belgium, Pyrennean, Scotch or English breeds of herding dogs quite reach that standard of perfection he finds in his hardy and reliable Kelpie and Barb, says a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

Uncertainty marks the ancient origin of most sheep dogs. The Australian dogs are no exception. We have heard too often the fanciful story of the wolf strain in the German and Belgium shepherd dogs. The like assertion is made of the prick-eared Kelpie, of his relationship with the native wild dog, the Dingo, which is supposed to have produced his fox-like face. Black, he stands 2 feet high and weighs 55 pounds.

The smaller Barb more closely resembles the Scotch collie or our small black and white working collie. He works admirably, confining his busy movements to the driving and herding. With remarkable speed and almost human-acting mind, he performs work indicative of quick thought. Seldom does he circle the herd should his presence be needed at the opposite side. Covering the shortest line between two points, he travels at great speed, running over the backs of his charges, his light feet carrying him with the surefootedness of a terrier scurrying over rocks.

Chinese Used Big Rollers to Produce Their Sugar

While American pioneers were grinding their grain in stone rollers a century or more ago, Chinese immigrants in Hawaii were producing sugar in the same manner.

Two rollers, believed to have been imported from South China more than 100 years ago, were found under the ruins of one of the territory's first sugar mills, near Honolulu, says the San Francisco Chronicle.

The rollers, weighing more than a ton each, were turned by horse power to crush the stalks and produce the juice from which sugar was boiled.

Several mills were in use in recent times in Formosa and the Philippines, where communities produce their own sugar.

Steam-driven machinery in more than 30 mills in Hawaii produces more than 1,000,000 tons of sugar annually.

The rollers were set up in the original manner at Honolulu by the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' association through co-operation of the Hawaiian Historical society.

The society's files reveal information on how the mill was assembled when it was first taken to the islands, and the operation was duplicated.

One of the stone rollers is driven by a wooden arm to which a horse or mule is hitched. Wooden cogs attached to this roller drive the other one. The stalks of cane are fed in by hand.

The Word "Console"

The word "console" was taken from the French early in the Eighteenth century, and with its original meaning, as a term in architecture. Its etymology is doubtful, possibly from the verb consolider, to consolidate. The term originally denoted a bracket or corbel, either ornamental or for supporting a cornice or fixture. Toward the close of the Nineteenth century, in organ-building, the meaning was extended to denote the portion of the instrument containing the manuals and stops. The console-table, in which the table was supported wholly or in part by consoles, or whose legs had the appearance of consoles, originated in the early Nineteenth century. But the meaning of the word console is entirely missing in its application to the modern gas-range.—Literary Digest.

Early Cannons Smoothbores

All of the early cannon, except a few only that were entirely experimental, were smoothbores, shooting round shot, the first of stone and the later of metal, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune. A round shot fired from a smoothbore cannon was as lifeless as the knuckle ball or slow ball thrown by the present-day baseball pitcher. It journeyed through the air with little if any turn, plied up a cushion of air before it, and fell to earth much more quickly than the projectile of a rifled gun, that literally bores its way through the air.

Facts About Alaska

Alaska is about one-fifth the size of the United States, with federal reserve lands full of fine timber. The winter temperatures at Juneau are the same as at St. Louis, Mo. A great fishing industry is located there. Two thousand species of native flowers, moose, deer, caribou and brown bear are to be found by the hunters. Very interesting are the salmon canneries, the blue fox ranches and seal herds, while the scenery is nothing short of majestic.

Home of the Flamingos

Flamingos are natives of the mahogany swamps of Cuba and the islands in the Bahamas. Contrary to popular belief they are not migratory birds. They formerly were found in overwhelming numbers in Cuba and the Bahamas, but so many were killed for their beautiful plumage and because they are such tender food that they are rapidly becoming extinct.

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building — Washington, D. C.

Washington.—In the last two weeks the National Capital has been under the tent of a three-ring circus, if ever one existed. At the Capitol building, there has been utter confusion as Democrats fought among themselves and Republicans and Independents sat on the sidelines and said "sic 'em." At the other end of Pennsylvania avenue, business activity has been amazing. The President was beginning to start to commence to spend five billion dollars. In between has been the largest hangover of Easter visitors the Capital city has known in recent years.

Three-Ring Circus

Mr. Roosevelt, having complete control of the largest sum of money ever turned over to one man, has been running his brain at lightning speed to make good on bis promise that actual spending will begin in two months. He has announced that some sixty agents of the government will participate in the spending function but roosting on top of the various spending groups are to be three newly created boards, each responsible to his direction and each enjoined to bear down in order that the public works and relief funds in his charge may flow freely.

I hear general commendation of the President for selecting Frank C. Walker of Montana and New York to head up the spending operations. Mr. Walker, a lawyer, is experienced in a big business way and is accepted everywhere as a man with capacity to do the job. The fly that is floating around and threatens to get into the ointment, however, is the existence of two schools of thought in the administration. This condition may undo the good work which Mr. Walker is regarded as capable of doing.

The five-billion-dollar spending machine will be guided first by the President, second by Mr. Walker and third by the various agencies now in existence. They are supposed to present plans and Mr. Walker will be expected to analyze and determine their values.

President Will Guide

Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, undersecretary of agriculture, will have something like nine hundred million dollars to spend in remaking the rural districts of the nation in a job variously described as "rural resettlement" and other similar short titles. This program contemplates expansion and intensification of work now being done by the Agricultural Adjustment administration and the Federal Emergency Relief administration, including attacks on the problem of dust storms and other types of soil erosion. Although Professor Tugwell has no plans complete, he is working in the direction of transplanting many farmers from poor land where living is hard to more fertile fields. Under his jurisdiction also will be reforestation and a general examination of land uses.

A second agency that is new in the current set-up provides for development of rural electrification. The third new spending movement is directed at dangerous railroad grade crossings. The funds that will be set aside for these latter two, however, will total only about one-fourth as much as Professor Tugwell will spend in his orgy.

Other scheduled programs for expenditure include:

Assistance to clerical and professional workers—the white collar folks.

Loans and grants to states, cities and counties.

Development of new housing construction in cities and rural districts and general reconditioning and remodeling of homes already existing.

Extension and expansion of the Civilian Conservation corps to a maximum of six hundred thousand workers.

Further public building construction but in a less extensive manner than previously was attempted.

Although the President assured congress that he himself would administer the five-billion-dollar fund, and succeeded in quieting criticism to some extent by the statement, official announcement of the allotment board shows the name of Secretary Ickes as chairman. Many caustic darts were fired at Mr. Ickes during the two months while the public works bill was held up in congress, because members did not like the Ickes policy as public works administrator. Of course, as the set-up now stands Mr. Walker will determine the character of spending and Mr. Ickes and his allotment board will determine how much money each may have. That would seem to eliminate the causes of trouble experienced heretofore by the members of congress and the Ickes organization. Nevertheless, critics of the secretary have begun to suspect something.

Ickes a Target

Mr. Roosevelt has said in White House press conferences several times lately that he would permit no delay in getting the spending machinery in motion. He assured the country in his radio speech the other night that his policy was to be speed and assistance where the money will do the most good. The President certainly has made clear that he is anxious to get things going.

Newspaper correspondents reporting Capital news had a good laugh the other day at the attempt of the Democratic national congressional committee to satisfy all sections of the country in an announcement made by the committee respecting its organization. I can conceive of no better way to tell the story than to quote opening paragraphs from four statements issued simultaneously by the committee on the subject mentioned. The paragraphs which follow are taken from statements which were delivered to my office in one envelope:

Amuses the Press

1—"The West will play an important part in the direction of the campaign of the Democratic national congressional committee, now being organized by Chairman P. H. Drewry of Virginia. Representative Abe Murdock of Beaver, Utah, has been selected as a vice chairman of this committee, and, under plans proposed, will have general supervision over the campaign in the West."

2—"In the organization on for the coming campaign of the Democratic national congressional committee the South will play a very important part. Not only is Congressman P. H. Drewry of Virginia chairman of this committee, but he has selected other southern congressmen to aid him. Representative Virgil Chapman of the Sixth Kentucky district has been chosen as chairman of the very important executive committee. His is what is historically known as the Henry Clay district, and has been a political battle ground of the nation for considerably more than one hundred years."

3—"Unless all signs fail, the Middle West will be an important battle ground in the congressional elections of next year. Representative P. H. Drewry of Virginia has recognized this when, as chairman of the Democratic national congressional committee, he aided in the selection of Congressman Eugene B. Crowe of the Ninth Indiana district, as first vice chairman of the Democratic national congressional committee. Representative Crowe will have general supervision over Democratic campaign activities of congressional candidates throughout the central part of the country. His jurisdiction will extend from the Ohio to the Great Lakes. Practically every national election for the last one-half century or more has been won or lost in the states comprising this district."

4—"In the reorganization of the Democratic national congressional committee Chairman P. H. Drewry of Virginia has sought to give additional prominence to members from the East. Representative William J. Granfield of Massachusetts has been selected as one of the vice chairmen and will have general supervision over campaign activities throughout the North and East. Associated with him will be Representative William N. Rogers of New Hampshire, who has been named a member of the executive committee. Congressman Rogers represents the district which boasts of Daniel Webster, the great orator of one hundred years ago."

Of course, it was intended that the statements should be distributed to correspondents from the various sections of the country so that western newspapers would have been told how important their section was and eastern newspapers would have had information to the effect that the eastern section was all important. It was not an unusual procedure but it happened that the statements were distributed together and that afforded the butt of the joke.

Senator Bankhead (Dem., Ala.), of cotton production control fame, has another idea for legislation. This time the senator is seeking to make it possible, he says, for every tenant farmer to become a land owner. He has legislation pending in congress to carry out his program and it appears now that it may go through.

Bankhead's Idea

It is proposed to create another government-owned corporation which would have power to issue one and a half billion dollars' worth of government-guaranteed bonds. These bonds could be sold by the corporation and the proceeds used to buy land for present landless farmers. They would become owners in name and would have the millstone of that debt around their necks for twenty years if they succeeded in earning enough income to pay off the debt in that time. It is true the measure would open the way for land ownership and would make the terms of ownership about as easy as is possible when one borrows another's money. Those facts, however, do not remove the conditions which a good many observers hold are bad.

For instance, it is difficult to see how the tenant can make a living and sufficient profit to pay off the debt to the government if he has been unable to accomplish that same purpose with money borrowed commercially. It is being said freely that such legislation will serve only the purpose of relieving present owners of land which they do not want by its transfer through the government to others who may not be able to pay for it. In other words, it is another bill to put more people in debt.

MEN OF EARTH

By Russell Lord

"TO THE STARS BY HARD WAYS"

IN KANSAS, that rugged state which bears on its shield the motto, "Ad astra per aspera," William Allen White, a great editor, discovered Jennie Owen, a born writer. And when she brought out her first book, this is what he said of her in his Emporia Gazette:

"Jennie Owen was a conscientious, hard-working Normal student who came out of the Sixth district in northwestern Kansas with a burning desire for education and a knack of writing. She became the Gazette's Normal reporter. The first item she turned in was a four-line story about a youth in the Normal school asking Lizzie Wooster, the anti-cigarette crusader, if she had a match.

"After that Jennie Owen's copy was prize copy in the office. She became a star reporter. We put her upon every good story she had time to do and she did them all well. She went to El Dorado to work for Rollo Clymer on the Times. Her stuff has been reprinted all over Kansas.

"Now she has a book out. It is called 'Fodder' . . . a score or two of short stories of pioneer life; the short and simple annals of the pioneer family. They are more than short stories; they are marvelously good sketches. Their brevity approaches genius."

Of which appraisal, if you now mention it, Jennie Owen worriedly says:

"Yes, Mr. White likes my book. But, well—he and some other people whose opinion I respect; they like what I do now all right, but they think—they've been after me—to be more realistic. They think I ought to write more about the hard, harsh side of it."

She breaks off and begins boring small holes with her pencil in her desk blotter.

"Maybe it's so." (Her voice is unmistakably Kansan—a pleasant flat huskiness with a sort of "an" sound running through it, sharpening it.) "Maybe I ought to write more about the sharp, ugly side of things But I have to get out every day and meet the people I write for, and I know what they want me to write. They want me to write things that will carry them back to the time when they were young. We're all backward-lookers. And time softens the edges of things. The bitter part fades out. All you remember is the beauty of it."

Jennie Owen is forty-one years old. ("I guess you'll think I'm a funny sort of woman, telling my age. I wouldn't; only it's part of the story. I was thirty-one before I even got to high school.") Slight and trig, shy, yet valiant, she faces you squarely and tells you plainly, bluntly what you need to know. Her severe glasses, her neatly coiled hair, her air of gentle competence—these suggest at first glance the schoolmarm. But not her hands; they are impatient; nor her mouth, it shows at the corners too deep a sensitiveness; and her eyes suggest an habitual inwardness of thought that wouldn't do in a teacher.

This is her new job, here at Junction City. She is country news editor, country reporter and columnist on the Daily Union. She works a long day. Here on her desk are stacks of handwritten copy—local letters sent in by country correspondents; she edits their copy, puts it into shape to print. This, with the rewrite stuff phoned in, generally takes the better part of her morning—from seven, say, until noon. In the afternoon, she is outside, about town and out over that Kansas country to wherever people gather. In the afternoon, she is reporter herself, collecting the tidings of harvests, sermons, socials, the weather, new barns and poultry houses and sleeping porches, births and weddings, gossip, deaths. Thus until suppertime—and at night, in her boarding house, Jennie Owen writes her column and her books. "I work a longer day than most farmers—twelve, fourteen, sometimes sixteen hours. But I don't mind; I like it."

You wonder how long she can keep it up. She looks small, tired, and a little frightened, behind that big copy desk.

"Ask me what you want and I'll tell you. You see, this is the first time I've ever been on this end of an interview, and I don't know just how to act. . . .

"It isn't because I don't know the other side of farming—that isn't why I don't write about it. I know that side of it. I had plenty of that. But—I don't know—that just doesn't seem to be the important part of it now, not the part I like to remember.

"There was my Grandfather Owen: I'd like to write a book about him. They offered him the site of Kansas City for a saddle horse but, being a good Kentuckian, he wouldn't swap!

"And my father—he and Mother came here into Kansas from Missouri in Christmas week, 1870. Somebody had squatted on the quarter-section they wanted, so they picked up and camped up in the hills, and after a while this other fellow got tired of it. Then Father traded quarter-sections with him, with a pair of boots to boot. The other fellow went back east. So did thousands of others. But my father was a 'man who stayed.'

"He stayed until he had seen the cottonwood switches he had pulled from the sandbars of the Republican river grow into great trees for his children to play under. He stayed right through the hot winds and the scourge of grasshoppers—the 'fodder years,' we called them; I named my book for them—years when the corn rolled up in the field, and you had to fill the rain barrel from the pump to keep it from going to staves.

"He wasn't an educated man. But he was a great reader and a born farmer. Sagging gates never had any place, I'll tell you, in his scheme of things. The way he saw it, Uncle Sam had bet him $14 he couldn't make a living off that claim, those 160 acres of buffalo grass. So he stuck it out in spite of everything, on a bet. And before he died he had it all in corn, wheat and alfalfa, with a good white house on it, with green shutters, in place of the old log cabin. A good white house with a fine lawn of clover and bluegrass. That was what he was after; and he got it.

"I was born in the log cabin. I can shut my eyes and see the kitchen of it yet. We had an old Charter Oak cookstove. The wallpaper was newspaper. The old Toledo Blade and the Prairie Farmer were the leading patterns. And we had a Seth Thomas clock. Father wound it up every Saturday night after the chores were done. . . .

"My mother was hardly more than a girl. It hurts, when I think how she tried to beautify that cabin. Bittersweet berries in a queer old green vase. A bunch of cattails tied with a faded pink ribbon. Things like that. . .

"Mary Small Owen—that was her name when she married. I used my middle name in signing my book because it was her name, too. She came from good people, from a home of comfort and refinement. Pioneer life was too much for her. But she never gave in to it; that gay Irish heart was never daunted. . . . She died when I was six years old. My sister was four years old at the time and my brother eight days old.

"My father married again. We grew up with a stepmother. She was good to us, but I guess we worried her a lot, and Father, too. I did, especially. I hated dishwashing. I always had my nose in a book, and whenever I made cake it always looked as if the cat had laid on it! I would read while I was churning and, as if that weren't enough, I'd steal off to the haymow and read some more!

"Down at the Woodtick Hollow school, I was just as big a problem. I not only hated arithmetic, I despised it. To this day, I haven't learned to keep my check book straight. And oh! how I hated parsing and diagramming sentences. I just wanted to write; never mind the rules! But there was one teacher I'll always be grateful to—Miss Minnie Hutchins; she encouraged me.

"About the time I got through grade school, my stepmother died. That put high school out of the question. I had to stay at home and take care of the house and the younger children. I didn't want to, but I had it to do.

"I kept house for sixteen years—from the time I was fifteen until I was thirty-one. I never did learn to like housework, but I could always escape into books. I read everything I could lay hands on. An awful mixture—E. P. Roe, Lena Rivers, Mary J. Holmes, Bertha M. Clay—anything!

"Father was worried about the way I devoured book after book, but hazy and helpless about how to guide me. He would throw some of the books I was reading into the fire and give me magazines instead: The Youth's Companion, The World's Work, Farm & Fireside, Munsey's. He himself read few books; only magazines and the Bible and Pilgrim's Progress.

"He died in 1915. It seemed as if that was the end of the world to me. But I had been doing some church work and two pioneer Presbyterians, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Van Gilder, they were the ones that gave me the courage that put me back in school again. 'It's not too late,' they said.

"Well, I went. I entered the State Normal, high school section, at Emporia. I had never been away from home. None of my family had ever attended high school, much less college. I was frightened all the time, but I found that I knew more than I thought I did. Things would come up in class and I'd say to myself, 'Why, I knew that!' I got through the eight-year course, high school and college, in six years and graduated in the upper third of my class.

"I never expect to enjoy another six years that much. I washed dishes at a boarding house, waited counter at the cafeteria, edited the school paper, and reported school news for the Gazette. I never missed a single good concert or play, but I wore a certain Norfolk-Shepherd suit every year of my high school and college career. In my senior year it was made over into a dress and I wore it when I sat for my photograph for the class book. I left school out of debt.

"That paragraph Mr. White liked, I wrote it for the school paper and they threw it into the wastepaper basket. I took it to the Gazette office and slipped it on the city editor's desk. Mr. White sent for me and made me school reporter. He had me in to all the dinners and conferences, when the staff goes over the paper and talks shop. He was a wonderful help to me.

"The first thing, when I got out of school and into a newspaper job they made me society editor. I just couldn't do it. So they put me in charge of country correspondents and gave me a column. The same sort of column I do here—rural reminiscences mainly. And that's what I make my books from—reminiscences.

"I don't seem to be ready to write about things until after I have been remembering them for a long time. Even then, writing is the hardest work in the world for me. I get streaks when everything I do is awful. And the things that I like best, I write them, sometimes, when I feel meanest. I remember when I was plugging away on 'White Roses'—I had a headache, and the girl across the hall was reading aloud to another girl. The heroine's name in the story was Jennie. It about drove me crazy. But I had to have it for the next day's paper, so I got it done."

Here it is:

"White roses, sweet silent reminders of carefree days, are on our desk today. They grew in Mrs. C. A. Kitch's rose garden. To us, white roses have a rare association. Our girlhood days were in close proximity to a country graveyard on a high, windswept hill. The soil was poor and only the hardiest shrubs thrived. But every spring, undaunted by recurring failures, loving hands would plant flowers which would wither and die when the rains ceased.

"Eventful days were those when we spied a team, unhitched and tied to a wagon on the graveyard hill, for we knew some one from a distance had come to clean up their graves and plant flowers. They would come down to our house at noon to water their horses and eat their lunch under the shade of the cottonwoods. Mother would ask them in to dinner and, if they declined, she would send us out with a pot of hot coffee. And usually we accompanied the visitors back to the graveyard in the afternoon.

"And so we learned the tragedy of the white roses. White roses were coveted above all others for the graves of little ones who had died. Not a mother, as we recall, but 'laid down' a root in the fall and coddled and coaxed until she had a sprout of plant in the spring. But she watered the bush with her tears in vain. The fragile white roses were not hardy enough to withstand the hot winds and drouth and the long, hard winters.

"The sod has encroached upon the grave of 'Old Man' Woods who was self-appointed caretaker of the graveyard from the time his girl wife died until the grim Reaper's scythe cut him down—a period of more than thirty years. The scrawny little cedars have grown to giant trees. The lilac bushes and the purple flags proclaim spring with their fragrance and beauty. But there are no white roses."

All Alive—O!

A prehistoric nursery of frogs has come to light as a result of the operations of a party of workmen in sand quarries at Washington, near Sunderland. Last summer the men found themselves besieged, day after day, by armies of tiny frogs. There was no water, no moisture, no spawn to account for their presence. Yet they continued swarming in myriads. Now, it is established, the frogs were being hatched out by the sun from eggs buried by an upheaval about 25,000 years ago.

The frogs were blind, of a peculiar sand color, and, most remarkable of all, developing from the egg embryo into the frog, dispensing with the tadpole stage. This living lesson on evolution must be one of the most wonderful on record.—London Tit-Bits.

It is soometimes possible to give logical answers to silly questions. An exchange cites these in proof: To the question "How long is a piece of rope?" we are given this answer: "Twice as long as the distance from the center to either end." If asked "How far can a dog run into the woods?" we may confidently reply: "A dog can run only halfway into the woods, because after that he would be running out of the woods."

METHODIST MEN SPONSORED MOTHER-DAUGHTER BANQUET

Over One Hundred Mothers And Daughters At Banquet

The men of the Methodist Church sponsored a Mother and Daughter banquet which was put on Tuesday night and attended by about one hundred and twenty-five ladies of this community. A two course dinner was served.

Before the first and second courses the following program was given: A welcome was extended by Rev. Zabilka, and Mrs. P. W. Johnson responded for the Mothers, and Miss Agnes Galbreth spoke for the Daughters. An instrumental duet by Nora Wellemeyer and C. G. Waterman was enjoyed. Grandma Haefner, 90, was presented with a gift for being the oldest mother present, while Verner Nelson's little girl was given a gift for being the youngest daughter present; she being less than four years old.

Mrs. Walter Pritchard, of Garner gave the address of the evening and her talk was greatly enjoyed by all.

SEED SUDAN GRASS FOR SUMMER PASTURE

Seeding some sudan grass for temporary pasture on farm short of regular pasture, or where the regular pasture is likely to dry up during the hot summer months, is suggested by County Agent S. J. Oberhauser.

Sudan grass will produce succulent pasture in hot, dry weather when blue grass is dried up and brown, and will give more grazing than most other crops. The crop may be sowed in any time after the soil warms up. It may be drilled, or broadcast and harrowed in. The usual rate is 10 to 15 pounds per acre. It does not require lime when seeded on acid soils.

In Iowa sudan grass is usually planted in the latter half of May, in which case it is ready to pasture about July 1, when bluegrass usually is starting to dry up on account of hot, dry weather.

Mr. Oberhauser suggests letting the crop get up 8 or 10 inches before the stock are turned in on it. If it gets a good start it is not easily injured by overgrazing.

Sudan grass will carry two or more head of stock to the acre during the summer months—something few pastures will do. However, the crop takes much fertility from the soil and returns very little. For that reason it is recommended as an emergency pasture; not as a soil improving crop.

WATERWORKS BONDS BOUGHT BY FIRST NATIONAL BANK

August Ridder; Joe Miller Funerals Held Past Week

Funeral services for Joe Miller were held at the Reformed Church Saturday afternoon. The Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch spoke on the text, "In my Father's House are many Mansions."

A quartette consisting of Harvey Barz, Mrs. W. L. Thada, Mrs. A. H. Dulmes and Edwin Thieman sang two numbers, "My Lord Abide" and "Beautiful Valley of Eden."

Joe Miller was born in Germany, July 4, 1865. He came to America as a young man and lived for several years in Chicago where he worked in an implement factory as a painter. In 1895 he moved to Klemme and for the past forty years he followed the vocation of painter and decorator in this commuunity. When this last depression hit us, Joe Miller, being an old man, and finding it hard to earn his living, moved to the County Home where he passed away last Thursday noon, May 9th, being nearly 70 years of age.

The things we remember about Joe Miller are these. He had a good bicycle and rode to and from his work both in town and country on his bike. Joe had a little one room house in Klemme where he lived alone and did his own cooking. Joe was a man who enjoyed leisure. He planned his work so that he would be busy only about four days a week thus giving himself time to read several magazines, play his phonograph take pictures with his camera or go fishing, etc. He was in fact a "gentleman of leisure" and with his clean white overalls was a familiar sight about town.

Several years ago Joe Miller made a trip to Chicago to attend the wedding of his son. Other than this, Joe never talked about his family or relatives and we do not at this time know the son's address.

One fine trait in the character of Joe Miller was his loyalty to his friends. He spoke well of everybody in this communuity and it seemed everybody liked Joe Miller. Even during his stay at the County Home Joe spoke well of the treatment he received and was high in praise for Mr. and Mrs. Rhiems.

Joe Miller could hardly be called a "pillar in the church" but he had great respect for the homes, the schools and the churches of our community and was a regular attendant at the Klemme Reformed Church.

Joe Miller was laid to rest in a modest gray casket furnished by the county, but the casket was covered with a large spray of snap-dragons provided by his friends among the business people of Klemme's Main Street.

Members of the Young People's Bible Class of the Reformed church purchased burial space and provided the fund for perpetual care for Joe Miller so that he lies buried in a nice part of the cemetery and his grave will always have care. The following members of this class acted as pall bearers: Mitchell Roos, Raymond Barz, Werner Priebe, Dale Schlei, Ronald Barz and August Josten.

(Obituary courtesy of Wellemeyer)

August Henry Ridder was born in Lippe Detmold, Germany, Dec. 29, 1870 and died at his home in Klemme May 7, 1935 at the age of 64 years, 4 months and 8 days.

He came with his parents to America at the age of five and located near Rockford, Iowa. His whole life has been spent in or near Klemme. He was a skilled blacksmith, carpenter, farmer and plumber and he worked at each of these trades at one time or another.

He was married on Dec. 1, 1892 to Miss Ida Mary Beier. To this union were born five children, four sons and one daughter. They are: William of Waterloo; Ben, Harold, and Walter of Liberty township; and Mrs. Frank Ward of Klemme.

Mr. Ridder united with the German Methodist church at Rockford in childhood, later transferring his membership to the German Methodist church in Klemme and became a member of the English Methodist church at the time of the merger, something over 10 years ago. About 25 years ago he had a real Christian conversion which changed his heart and life. From that time until his death he has been a faithful supporter of the church and has stood by it.

Mr. Ridder's health began to fail about five years ago and two years later he retired from active work. He suffered a light stroke the 18th of April from which he seemed to recover. A week later he experienced another and on April 27th his right side became completely paralized and he was confined helplessly to his bed until the end came last Tuesday evening at 8.20. His testimony just a few days before his death was that he was ready to go. Those who waited on him during his illness would say that he was an easy patient to care for.

Besides his widowed wife and five children he leaves to mourn his death, eight grand children; Four brothers, Henry of Arcadia, Fa., Fred of Klemme, Julius of Fairmant Minn., Adolph of Watertown, S. D.; one sister, Mrs. Emil Kohlstedt of, Coalville, Washington. One sister, Minnie, having died when 12 years of age. There are also several more distant relatives and a host of friends and acquaintances who will miss him.

Funeral services were held from the Methodist church on Friday afternoon in charge of Arthur Wellemeyer, funeral director, with the Rev Wm Zabilka officiating. Interment was made in the Klemme cemetery.

Local Farmer Raises Wild Geese

Henry Ward, farmer, living south of Klemme, says his wild Canadian Honker goose laid five eggs this spring and the other day hatched out her brood of four young goslings.

Henry's wild geese are four years old .Last year the goose laid a nest ful of eggs, but dynamite blasting in building the new road past his farm ruined the eggs. Wild geese do not lay eggs until they are three or four years old.

Women's place may be in the home but it takes more than the world's men to keep them in their place.

ADDS TO GARAGE EQUIPMENT TO HANDLE NEW WORK

Fred J. Arnold, proprietor of the Klemme Auto Co. has added more equipment to increase the scope of work that can be done in the repair department.

A modern pressure paint spraying machine has been installed so that car painting can now be done at the local garage. In addition, a number of tools have been installed so that wrecked cars can be reconditioned, dents removed from bodies and fenders and other preparatory work done before painting.

CURRENT EVENTS PASS IN REVIEW

PEEK THINKS UNITED STATES NO LONGER IS THE BIG CREDITOR NATION.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

GEORGE N. PEEK, in his capacity of advisor to the President on foreign trade, has just made public statistics that tend to show the United States is losing its position as the world's chief creditor nation, and makes recommendations that are in accord with the growing trend against internationalism in the administration and in conflict with Secretary Hull's program of removing barriers to international trade by reciprocal trade agreements.

George N. Peek

Stating that whether or not this country still owes less to other nations than they owe to it appears to depend on the true value of defaulted war debts, Mr. Peek recommends these immediate steps:

"1. The inauguration of a detailed study of our direct investments abroad and foreigners' direct investments in the United States, to supplement the studies now in progress of capital movements.

"2. A review of all national policies based in whole or in part upon our international creditor status."

The proposal seems to lead toward high tariffs and a policy of allocating our foreign trade among other nations, as is done by many of the European countries.

Figures compiled by Mr. Peek indicate that the United States is a net international creditor by $16,897,000,000, but this includes $10,304,000,000, principal amount of war debts owed by foreign governments, and also foreign bonds held by private investors in the United States invoiced at their face value, and a pre-depression estimate of the value of American branch factories abroad and other direct investments in foreign countries. Mr. Peek strongly infers that a re-estimation of these "assets" will result in such a scaling down that this country will no longer be a creditor nation and need not act as such.

By his recommendation for a review of all our national policies based in whole or in part on our international credit status, Mr. Peek unquestionably means that there will be no further validity to the argument that as a creditor nation we must open our markets to imported goods, and that imports need be only sufficient to balance current exports, taking into consideration such invisible items of international trade as shipping services and tourist expenditures.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT strongly resented the criticism of his New Deal policies by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and retorted by calling to the White House Secretary Roper's business planning and advisory council for an endorsement of NRA extension and the social securities program. Then to the newspaper correspondents Mr. Roosevelt scored the action of the chamber, asserting that in too many cases so-called business organizations misrepresent the business men for whom they claim to speak, and that he did not believe a single speech made at the chamber's meeting contained any mention of the human side of the picture. He declared the business organizations were not indicative of the mass belief and that he would go along with the great bulk of the people.

Several members of the business advisory council were also members of the Chamber of Commerce, and it is said they resented the President's action in seemingly using them to offset the attack by the chamber. Some of them were on the point of resigning from the Roper council, but were placated by Mr. Roosevelt who assured them their views were highly valued.

IN THE crash of a transport plane of Transcontinental Western Air near Atlanta, Mo., Senator Bronson M. Cutting of New Mexico and four other persons fell to their death. The pilot was unable to land at Kansas City because of a dense fog and his fuel gave out before he could reach an emergency landing field at Kirksville. Besides Mr. Cutting those killed were Miss Jeanne A. Hillias of Kansas City, Mrs. William Kaplan of West Los Angeles, and Harvey Bolton and K. H. Greeson, pilots, both of Kansas City. Eight passengers were seriously injured.

Senator Cutting

Bronson Cutting, a millionaire of an aristocratic family, was a radical Republican and was one of the outstanding members of the senate. He supported Mr. Roosevelt for President in 1932, but when he came up for reelection last fall he was not given the endorsement of the administration. His victory was contested by Dennis Chavez and the case is still before the senate elections committee. Mr. Cutting was born on Long Island in 1888, graduated from Harvard and thereafter went to New Mexico. In the World war he was an infantry captain and assistant military attache at the American embassy in London. He was appointed to the senate in 1927 to fill a vacancy and was elected next year to a six year term.

The senate on being advised of the tragedy adjourned out of respect to the memory of Senator Cutting, and the house cut short its session.

AFFIRMING a decision of the Supreme court of the District of Columbia, the United States Supreme court held unconstitutional the railroad retirement act, ruling that many of its provisions are invalid. The act provided for a system of old age pensions for all railroad workers. The decision was read by Justice Owen J. Roberts. It condemned many provisions of the law as "arbitrary," placing an undue burden on the railroads and having no relation to safety and efficiency in the operation of the railways.

The act was passed by the Seventy-fourth congress just before it closed, and had the tacit approval of the new administration, although President Roosevelt said he believed it would have to be perfected by amendment. It set up a compulsory pension plan, requiring contributions by both the carriers and the benefited employees. The District of Columbia courts held that the law went too far when it included intrastate as well as interstate employees and when it gave workers retirement credit for the time they had spent in the service prior to passage of the act.

ALL the vast British empire celebrated the silver jubilee of King George V and Queen Mary—the twenty-fifth anniversary of their accession—and for three months there will be a continuous series of fetes in the United Kingdom and all the dominions and dependencies. London, of course, was the scene of the chief celebration on the opening day, and the metropolis was thronged with visitors. Hotels and rooming houses were overcrowded and the king ordered that Hyde Park be kept open so some of the overflow thousands could sleep there.

King George

There were seven state processions the first day. The first was that of the speaker of the house of commons, Capt. Edward A. Fitzgerald, with five ancient gilded coaches; the second, that of Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, with six coaches in which rode the dominion prime ministers. Then came a two-coach procession of Lord High Chancellor Sankey, and one of the lord mayor of London, Sir Stephen Killik. The fifth procession was that of the duke of York, from Buckingham palace, two carriages with a captain's escort of the magnificently appareled royal horse guards.

The prince of Wales, as heir to the throne, came sixth. He had with him a captain's escort of the Life Guards and two carriages, in the first of which he rode with Queen Maud of Norway and his brother, the duke of Gloucester, like him, a bachelor.

Finally, in the most gorgeous parade of all, came George and Mary, and as their ornate coach, drawn by the famous grays, passed, the voices of all loyal Britishers rose in a roar of "God bless the king and queen." The rulers, accompanied by all the other notables, went to St. Paul's cathedral to give public thanks to God.

DISREGARDING the wishes of President Roosevelt, the finance committee of the senate adopted and reported for passage a simple resolution continuing the national recovery act until April 1, 1936, and at the same time making these provisions:

Donald Richberg

1. No price fixing shall be permitted or sanctioned in codes, except in those relating to mineral or natural resources which now have price fixing provisions.

2. No trade engaged in intrastate commerce shall be eligible for a code.

3. The President is given specified time in which to review present codes to carry out the conditions laid down in the first two exceptions to the resolution.

Both President Roosevelt and Donald Richberg, head of the NRA, had urged the passage of a new two-year NRA bill which would set up a stricter dictatorship over business and industry. The senate finance committee, however, would not consent to this and instead passed the resolution, which was drawn up by Senator Clark of Missouri and approved by Chairman Pat Harrison. Twelve senators first called at the White House and the President seemed willing to accept the continuing resolution until Mr. Richberg came in and protested urgently; whereupon Mr. Roosevelt turned it down. The committee then took the action noted by a vote of 16 to 3, defying both the President and Richberg.

BAHIA, third city of the republic of Brazil, was overwhelmed by furious storms and torrential rains, and the destruction was extended to all the surrounding country. Communications were demoralized, but fragmentary reports told of terrible scenes of death and devastation. It was believed that at least 400 lives were lost and probably 2,000 persons rendered homeless. Rescue and relief work was being carried on as well as possible by hundreds of soldiers and the government agencies

TWO thousand young Catholics of Germany made an Easter pilgrimage to Rome, and on their return home they were treated as political suspects, stripped of their mementoes and held for a time in a concentration camp. Addressing another group of Pilgrims from Germany, Pope Pius made a strong protest against this action of the Nazis who, he said, "wish in the name of so-called positive Christianity to de-Christianize Germany, and they wish to conduct the country back to barbaric paganism, and nothing is left undone to disturb Christian and Catholic life."

THE senate committee named to devise a means of curbing such attacks on the President as are frequently made by Huey Long on the floor of the senate has not yet reported, but it is said Senator Bennett Champ Clark of Missouri has figured out how it can be done. Clark is the upper chamber's chief expert on parliamentary procedure and for four years he was parliamentarian of the lower house. His plan is to rewrite rule 19 of the senate rules to include the President and so protect him from unwarranted attacks and slanders. That rule reads at present:

Senator B. C. Clark

"No senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another senator or to other senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a senator."

One of Long's favorite ways of launching his diatribes is to rise to a question of personal privilege, and Clark proposes that in this respect the senate rules be changed to conform with those of the house. In that body when a member feels he has been aggrieved he must explain exactly how he has been injured before he is permitted to speak. The speaker decides whether or not his injury is justified.

Senator Glass of Virginia has failed at various times to silence the "Kingfish" and he, too, has a plan he thinks might help accomplish that end. He recommends a requirement that all amendments offered to an appropriation bill be germane. Such a requirement would affect other senators, but Glass' move admittedly is directed against Long.

YUGOSLAVIA'S dictatorship will be continued and enlarged, for Premier Yevtitch's government party won a sweeping victory at the polls; this, despite the fact that the small towns and villages of Croatia gave an overwhelming vote for the opposition leader, Dr. Vladimir Matchek.

IN THE name of 400,000 Knights of Columbus, Martin H. Carmody, supreme knight of the order, has sent to President Roosevelt a letter urging American diplomatic intervention on behalf of Catholics in Mexico. The matter has been up in congress at various times but quite naturally the administration is hesitant about interfering in what Mexico considers a domestic affair.

SECRETARY ICKES' Department of the Interior has now been elevated to the level of the State, Treasury and Agriculture departments, for congress has granted one of Harold's dearest wishes and given him an undersecretary, whose salary is to be $10,000 a year. This was a senate amendment to the Interior department appropriation bill, and was accepted by the house, 243 to 92, only after considerable pressure had been applied by the administration. Many of the house Democrats have asserted that Mr. Ickes snubbed them, and they would have liked nothing better than to administer a rebuke to him by defeating the amendment, but the party leaders drove them into line.

POLICE of Havana apparently are well on the way to solution of the mystery of the fire which destroyed the Ward liner Morro Castle, and other recent marine disasters. They have arrested three men, all natives of Catalan province in Spain, and say that they found on their persons letters of instructions concerning the destruction of the steamship Magallanes of the Spanish line, which was soon due in Havana. The documents, according to the authorities, ordered the accused to "take necessary action to precipitate a disaster similar to that of the Morro Castle." The police say the prisoners are well-known anarchists.

FOREIGN MINISTER PIERRE LAVAL of France and Ambassador Potemkin of Russia finally fixed up the mutual assistance pact between the two countries in a way acceptable to both and it was signed in Paris. M. Laval then prepared to leave for Moscow, planning to stop in Warsaw en route.

It would seem that Laval had his way with the treaty, for it subordinates military action of the two powers to the procedure of the League of Nations, to provisions of the Locarno pact and also to the Franco-Polish alliance.

ARIZONA'S victory over the government in the Parker dam case ruled on by the Supreme court alarmed the New Dealers for the safety of some of their other big projects of the same nature. The court decided that Secretary Ickes, as public works administrator, was without authority to dam navigable rivers unless specifically ordered by congress and that the law creating the PWA had not listed any such specific projects as the Parker dam.

POULTRY

CHICKEN MANURE RICH FERTILIZER

Should Be Used Only With Other Ingredients.

By Dr. H. B. Mann, Agronomist, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Poultry growers may use chicken manure in home-mixed fertilizers to materially reduce the cost of crop fertilization. The manure is rich in organic matter, but is not a complete fertilizer; consequently, it should not be applied without the other ingredients necessary to supply the proper plant food.

A mixture, including chicken manure, is as follows:

A ratio of 1,100 pounds of chicken manure, 600 pounds of acid phosphate, 200 pounds of nitrate of soda, and 100 pounds of potash.

This mixture is not suitable for all crops or all types of soil, but the county agents or the fertilizer specialists at State college will be glad to furnish formulas to growers who wish them.

One farmer applied the mixture at the rate of 350 pounds to the acre on a crop of corn and secured a yield of 40 bushels per acre. The farmer had intended to apply a side dressing of 75 pounds of sulphate of ammonia, but was prevented by the excessive rains.

The same mixture was used on ensilage corn and a yield of ten tons of ensilage per acre was secured.

This fertilizer is mixed like any other home mixture. However, the manure must be kept dry until ready for use. The manure should be cleaned off the dropping boards only when it is dry and be placed in sacks and stored in a dry place. The fertilizer can be mixed at the time of application.

Lights for Turkeys Are Demonstrated in Kansas

By stimulating early production in the breeding flock, it is possible to hustle young turkeys on to a late August or early September market and thus cash in on the high market prices prevailing at that time. The practicability of such a plan has been demonstrated at the Kansas experiment station, says Successful Farming.

In 1933 the station succeeded in stimulating early egg production by using morning lights. Under this plan of management the breeders were segregated from the regular college breeding flock on December 1, 1932, and placed in an ordinary laying house, which allowed about 14 square feet of floor space per bird. Morning light was turned on at 4:30 at the beginning, but as the days became longer this time was shortened. An ordinary 50-watt bulb with reflector gave an ample supply of light for each 15 by 15 feet compartment. After the birds were once confined in the house they were not allowed to run outside until the breeding season was over.

Sunshine Prevents Rickets

"If chicks receive a minimum of ten minutes daily of direct sunshine during the spring months," says Dr. L. E. Card, University of Illinois, "and are fed a ration that is complete except for the antirachitic factor, they are very unlikely to develop any symptom of rickets." This conclusion is the result of an experiment conducted at Ithaca, N. Y., to learn what the minimum of sunshine is that will prevent rickets. The experiment at Ithaca showed a minimum daily exposure since that point is one of the two areas in the United States that receive the least sunshine.

Separate Turkeys, Chickens

It is advocated that turkeys be kept away from chickens, that it is impossible to rear the two kinds of fowls together. That is not true merely because the two fowls are different, or because the chicken has some mysterious power for evil over the turkey, it is simply because nine out of ten farm hens are infested with the cecal worm, which is the intermediate host for the blackhead germ, and it is highly necessary to keep poults from coming in contact with this worm. If chickens were absolutely free of this worm, as well as other kinds, there would be no danger in permitting them to run together.

Poultry Facts

Surplus chickens may be safely canned at home.

Two pounds of wheat have about as much value in the poultry ration as a pound of bran and a pound of flour middlings.

Since the rooster will influence the chicks of each 12 hens, it becomes true that "the rooster is more than half the flock."

* * *

Excessively high summer temperatures are known to cause a decrease in egg size.

Colored lights are now used to candle eggs. Candled before a green or blue light, the content of the egg is more easily seen.

Egg laying ability of hens is an inherited characteristic. At Vineland, N. J., in a state egg-laying contest, one pen averaged 258 eggs per bird, another 121 eggs. Both pens were similarly cared for.

MEMORY OF WAR NEVER LASTING

Horror Has Small Effect on New Generations.

It is not so long since war was "outlawed" and the outlaw was ostracized. Even that mild and gentle child named Neutrality was not mentioned in polite or academic society. The slogan was not neutrality in thought, but peace in thought.

Now the outlaw is found not to be dead, but lurking in the woods, and it is discovered that all nations border on the same forest. The youth and some of their elders contemplate the future possibility of war by forswearing any participation in it—when it comes. Veterans' organizations advocate legislation now to take the profit out of war—when it comes. Scholars and students of peace begin to re-examine the utility of our traditional neutrality policy as a device for keeping us out of war—when it comes.

Through it all drones the refrain of those who picture the horrors of the next war—the wiping out of cities from the air; newer and more frightful gases; death rays. The same song was sung before 1914 and long, long before. It has never deterred nations from war, because it acts, if at all, on the individual and not on the mass, not on the nation, not on the government.

Even for the individual it is too overwhelming and too remote to be grasped except by those in whom it touches and torments the chords of personal memory. Soon a new crop has ripened. Those impersonal things known as governments respond more readily to the stern high calls of national honor and prestige. They seek, often sincerely, the welfare of their country. It is both a material and a spiritual welfare. Would either be served by war today or on a near tomorrow?—Philip C. Jessup, in Current History.

CHAIN LETTERS

A promising get-rich-quick scheme has swept the country off its feet overnight. Chain letters are passing through the hands of nearly every citizen of the United States, ranging in denomination from ten cents to fifty dollars.

Opinions differ greatly as too whether the practice is legal but the fact remains that numerous people have made tidy sums this way.

Dishonest people have taken advantage of the fad and have sent out thousands of letters reaping large fortunes. But the government is rounding up these persons and devoting much time to finding the starters of this prosperity club. Chain letters are still flooding the country. Some high school people have received a many as ten of them, but we haven't heard that any of them have become millionaires as yet.—C. L. K.

MISTAKES I WILL PROFIT BY

I have already learned to never, never chew gum in the presence of Mr. Hunter because many people have met their fate because of chew-bring the class gum. Very enjoyable bring th class gum. Very enjoyable to the class but not for the pocketbook.

Another thing is to never stay up late at night so you have to take a nap the last period or between classes or in class, for often people get caught in the act, which is very embarassing—so I hear.

Do not stick your head out of a window if a teacher is or isn't in the room because you might have a lonesome time staying after school for about an hour or more.

Never argue with a teacher about what you did or didn't do, because you always lose. This is my list of "Don'ts and Never's"; and take heed for you will never regret it.—Dorothy Greiman.

One of my mistakes this year that I hope to profit by is that whispering in school time or leaving the room without permission usually means a half an hour or sometimes an hour after school.

Another thing that I hope to profit by is to stop being late and having to stay after school for it. —Harold Abele.

The mistake that I made last year was quiting basketball. A person never knws what athletics mean to him until he has quit playing basketball or baseball.—Alvin Bachman.

GETTING OUT THE BOX OF SEED IN THE SPRING

What a great ambition one has when the air begins to get warm and the birds come back from their winter homes. When one rakes back the dead leaves and sees the little flowers and grass come up, one surely knows spring is here at last.

When the ground begins to get green it is time to go to the cabinet and get down the large box of seeds that had been placed there last fall. One of the first things to do is look over the supply of seed and see how many have to be purchased at the store.

In planting the garden one should be careful to put vegetables beside each other that harmonize both in size and color; for example, the radish and lettuce look nice beside each other because they are both small.

Another very intedesting project is planting flower seeds so the flowers will look nice. One has to use more care in planting flowers because they are noticed even more than vegetables. The taller flowers should be to the back of the planting area and the smaller flowers to the front. They should be placed so the colors will harmonize; for example, blue flowers and yellow ones look very nice.

Well, spring is here again and we can begin to plant the flowers. The best of luck to flower lovers. —Irene Spitler.

GETTING UP IN THE MORNING

There is nothing that I dread much more than getting up early in the morning. I am usually called twice before I decide that it is really time to get up. After I am called the first time, I never fail to go back to sleep again unless I am going away or something that day. Sometimes I also fail to get up the second time I am called, but the separator engine wakes me, so I get to breakfast on time.

In the winter it is hard to get up because my room is always so cold. I start dreading getting up the night before, and when I know I should get up, I stay in bed and shiver, but it is no warmer the second time I am called than the first.

In the summer time it is not cold but I still love to stay in bed. The birds are always singing merrily, and I like to listen to them.

I can sometimes be determined I am going to get up the next morning the first time I am called. When I am called, I remember I was going to get up but I am soon back to sleep again.

So one great advantage of living in a city is that one can stay in bed and listen to the birds sing love songs as long as he wishes to.—Velda Schaefer.

Last Friday Mr. Hunter taugth our English Class, as Miss Galbreth was helping the seniors with their play. He had us write on fishing trips. In most of the stories the bites were from mosquitoes instead of the fish. After the class had recited Mr. Hunter told his fish story. He said that the monster weighea twenty-one pounds and if you don't believe it, just ask him.—Earl Rietz.

JUNIOR-SENIOR BANQUET

Last Friday evening May 10th the Seniors were entertained at a lovely banquet given in their honor by the juniors. The banquet was held in the basement of the Methodist church and the decorations were carried out in blue and white, the senior class colors, with a Holland-like effect predominating. After a delicious three-course dinner, a program was given, consisting of various toasts and musical selections which were very much enjoyed by all. The mothers of the juniors prepared the banquet dinner. Miss Arends is the junior class sponsor.

The Pine Grave Box Of Yesterday

The first wooden rough box to be in the Klemme Cemetery was at the of Alma Gruetzmacher. It was the death in our town, and this child was to rest in the best hardwood coffin money could buy and a cypress rough was used in the grave.

And then for 40 years, a wooden was used at nearly every burial. Most these rough boxes were of common lumber. Now and then a heavy cypress was used; sometimes the pine box strengthened with a double top; and in instance, at the request of the family filled the rough box with white sand.

But with all these precautions the tection afforded by a wooden box was slight for the weight of the earth and they all "caved in" after a year

Today, a concrete box is used in of the old wooden rough box. The Co. of Mason City, make these concrete boxes for us. They are made in sections separate blocks of concrete, each reinforced with expanded metal, and dovetail together so as to make a complete, almost indestructible grave box. Mr. Henkel guarantees this box will never cave in during the time of the youngest person who attends the funeral. If it should, he will replace it free of charge.

Since January 1st, 1935, Wellemeyer furnishes this concrete grave box free for each adult burial (other than Veteran burials). These inexpensive concrete boxes are also made in children's sizes.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building — Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Probably the most notable incident of recent days in Washington is the explosion of a bomb by business. It is significant and important that the business voice, as represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, has spoken in such emphatic terms about the New Deal. It is further a matter of significance that the business voice critisized the New Deal generally as well as specifically, because it is the first time in the period since President Roosevelt took charge that anything like unity in business thought has been presented.

Blast at New Deal

The reaction was instantaneous. First, Secretary Roper of the Department of Commerce mustered 21 members of his business advisory committee for a counter attack. It was almost drowned out by the chamber's roar. Such was not the case, however, with the President's reply. He waited until the convention had ended to let loose a charge that the business interests were selfish. It made all the front pages.

This brings us to the crux of the condition precipitated by the outburst of the Chamber of Commerce convention. It is seldom, and I believe the record shows this statement to be absolutely true, that annual conventions of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States have been taken seriously by the newspapers. The business men have been looked upon as possessors and promoters of rather antiquated ideas. Their interests have been and are of a selfish character. That is quite obvious and quite natural. But at this time, the voice of business speaks more than just business views. It speaks politically. Hence, when business spoke this time the newspapers of the country paid heed. The result was an unprecedented amount of publicity was obtained by the chamber through the medium of its convention this year.

Whether this represents a change in the thought of the country, surely no one individual of any group is able to say definitely. It must be recognized, however, that for many months a highly vocal minority of politicians has been accusing the administration of throttling criticism. Although this group fought vigorously and charged the administration with having the greatest propaganda machine ever to exist, it obtained little publicity for those views. Most newspapers dismissed them by publication of three or four paragraphs, buried on the inside pages of the metropolitan dailies. So, necessarily, significance attaches to the fact that when the business voice was raised in apparent unity the newspapers accorded columns of space to it. It can be construed in no other way than as meaning there is a larger opposition to some phases of the New Deal at least than most of us had expected.

For quite a while such groups as the American Liberty league have pounded away at certain phases of the New Deal. To the Washington observers it appeared that these groups were getting nowhere and getting there fast. Of a sudden, however, the voice opposed to the New Deal seems to have found itself. Certainly at the moment and for the first time, there is an approximation of unity to New Deal opposition and that fact is reflected in a rather important way. I refer to the courage exhibited in congress where there is more and more evidence of a decision on the part of the legislators to assert their independence in contradistinction to previous silent obedience to the White House.

Opposition Unified

I believe it is too early to attempt a prediction whether the Chamber of Commerce leadership will last. If I were to make an individual guess I would say that leadership of this type will crumble. That guess is predicated upon the record of the past because heretofore it has been true that business always suffered defections and presently there was bushwhacking in its own camp. Regardless of whether that condition develops again, the explosive character of the speeches in the chamber's convention have added a momentum to Roosevelt opposition which it has lacked heretofore. It is just possible, therefore, that even if business leadership fails in its efforts to curb radical tendencies among the administration group, a well knit opposition may now be developing.

Pursuing this assumption further, one hears suggestions around Washington to the effect that a genuine and basic issue for the 1936 campaign may be in the making. It would seem that Mr. Roosevelt will be forced into the position again of appealing to the forgotten man of his 1932 campaign who has since been forgotten. The conservative thought of the country meanwhile will marshal behind the home owners, the possessors of property and capital and the workers whose income must be taxed heavily in subsequent years to pay for the program of spending our way out of the depression.

Some support is seen for this theory of probable issues in 1936 in the recent statement of Postmaster General Farley who spoke politically as chairman of the Democratic national committee. In almost so many words, Mr. Farley declared that the business interests had not been favorable to Mr. Roosevelt; that they were not now favorable to him and that there was no reason to expect the support of business hereafter. Mr. Farley, clever politician that he is, recognizes that under present conditions there are more votes on the side of the man who appeals to those who have not than there are on the side of the man who appeals to those who have.

On the other hand, government statistics show that something like 65,000,000 persons hold life insurance policies; that something like 20,000,000 have saving accounts in banks; that there are around 10,000,000 home owners in the nation, and that even at the lowest point of the depression there were more people working for salaries and wages than there were unemployed. Mr. Farley's guess apparently is that so many of these workers have had their incomes reduced that they will support a candidate who promises to improve their condition. In their numbers lies the difference between victory and defeat.

In addition to these factors, there is to be considered the probability of defections caused by such demagogic leadership as the Longs and the Coughlins. Saner thinking people know, of course, that the programs which Senator Long and Father Coughlin have been preaching far and wide are as impossible of fulfillment as was the EPIC program advanced by Upton Sinclair in his California campaign. But it may not be overlooked that these men can and will pull together several million voters.

No discussion of the controversy between business and President Roosevelt would be complete without consideration of the NRA. It is the hottest spot in congress right now. The situation is of such a character as to be comparable to a carbuncle on your neck. Those who have had carbuncles will fully understand.

NRA the Hot Spot

A few days ago, Mr. Roosevelt called the most obstreperous of opposition senators to the White House for a conference on the question of what to do about extending the national industrial recovery act. It is due to expire by limitation of law on June 16. He cleverly invited Miss Perkins, the secretary of labor, and Donald Richberg, the guiding hand of the Recovery administration, to sit in on that meeting. It was only natural that two such avid New Dealers as Miss Perkins and Mr. Richberg should hold out for continuation of NRA for a two-year period. And it was only natural for senators who do not believe wholeheartedly in all of the NRA principles to insist on a makeshift, or temporary continuation. The President put them into a cockpit to fight it out. The resulting disagreement was perfectly logical but the President had put himself in a position to trade with congress.

Since the NRA opponents in congress did not yield, they naturally went back to the Capitol and framed their own program. They propose to have NRA continued, with some of its unsatisfactory features eliminated, to April of next year. They probably will be able to muster enough support to pass some such legislation. If they do, the President will accept it. Actually, he has no choice. He cannot allow the policy represented by NRA to crash completely. It would mean a political defeat which the President, strong as he is, probably could not withstand.

It is a wiser and sadder Blue Eagle that is proposed in the senate resolution continuing NRA. That resolution is equipped with scissors to trim the tail feathers of the famed eagle so that it cannot operate against businesses whose traffic is wholly within a state—intrastate—nor will it permit price fixing.

Wiser Blue Eagle

The senate finance committee which drafted this resolution reported it to the senate by the overwhelming vote of sixteen to three. That shows better than any words of mine how thoroughly determined that senate group was to override the Richberg-Perkins views on administration policy. Succinctly, the continuing resolution provides for changes in the current law as follows:

1. No price fixing shall be permitted or sanctioned under any code except in codes covering mineral or natural resources industries that now embody the price fixing principle.

2. No trade engaged wholly in intrastate commerce shall be placed under code.

3. The President will have 30 days in which to review present codes of fair practice in order to revise and adjust each so that it will conform to the provisions of the new NRA.

"I think this is the best way out," said Senator Harrison, Democrat of Mississippi, chairman of the committee. "I feel certain we can pass this resolution without a great amount of debate and it will give NRA time to adjust itself and give the courts time to rule on the various questions of NRA validity."

MEN OF EARTH

By Russell Lord

"OUT OF THE HERD"

TOWARD the end of the third year of America's post-war agricultural depression, I heard Dr. Thomas Nixon Carver of Harvard talk straight, oldtime laissez-faire economics for three solid hours to a Farmers' week audience at Ohio State.

The farmers who were there to hear him had come in from property which for no plainly apparent reason had suddenly fallen off a third to a half of its former value. They leaned forward bulkily, their coats of cloth, fur and sheepskin dumped into their laps before them, and followed him with a sort of grieved intensity from point to point.

Doctor Carver revealed to them the beauties and rigors of free competition, the danger and iniquity of class aggression, the menaces that lurk when groups or governments propose, naively, to control supply, sway demand, divert or equalize flow of wealth.

He knew farmers, so he pulled no blows. He did not try to be clubby or popular, and when they asked him questions he was blunt. "There is only one sound thing for you to do," he said. "Cut down your inventory and make a new start. If you bought land at $350 an acre four years ago, and are still trying to make interest on that investment, or if you think you would like to have more credit to enable you to hold your land at that extravagant valuation, forget it. It can't be done. There is only one cure for inflated values and that is to get down to actual values. Find out what your land is worth today. See if you can make it pay on that basis. The difference between what you paid for it, and what it is worth now—you have simply lost that money. You can't charge anybody with it. There is no reason that anybody else should pay for your mistakes."

Horse sense, fatalism, powerful always in their appeal to outdoor people, wrought on that audience the intended charm. Money comes and goes on tides invisible. Always there are hard times for farmers after a war. Such things move in cycles. Time and patience are the only cure.

As Doctor Carver came to the end of the third and final hour of his forum, he appeared to have the whole crowd with him. You could feel their rueful acquiescence on the back of your neck. And they pretty much the same crowd who so lately had risen to acclaim with shining eyes the extravagant but pleasant prospect of an agriculture powerfully organized and militant; the speaker had been Aaron Sapiro, cooperative organizer and orator, permitted to attack college conservatism here at a farm bureau meeting on this same university campus, only a few days before.

The representative of the Citizen beside me pulled on his top coat, pocketed his notes, and stood. "Speaking of deflation," he said, "just look around!" The observation was just. Harvard had triumphed. The nation was safe. The farmers rose heavily, politely applauding, worriedly wrestling with overshoes and wraps. They had been restored to stoicism and to doubt. "What is to be, must be," their shoulders said.

H. P. Miller of Sunbury stood up. "I have some questions," he called.

An erect, handsome, grim-looking man of middle stature; his face red, weatherbeaten; his hair, crisp and thick, nearly the exact shade of his gray business suit. Almost every one there knew him. He had been one of Ohio's first college-trained farmers, its first county agent, a charter officer of its Farm Bureau federation, a storm center in those emotional outbursts from which came at length a better price for milk.

I do not have an exact copy of his questions or of Doctor Carver's answers, but they went about like this:

"As I understand you, Doctor Carver, there is nothing we can do as farmers—as a class—to bend the forces of supply and demand our way?"

"Practically nothing."

"How about co-operation?"

"I regard it as valuable education for those farmers who engage in it."

"But not as a method of enforcing economic adjustments?"

The eastern economist replied gently, half playfully, that economic adjustments have a way of enforcing themselves.

The farmer turned and faced the audience. He raised one arm and cried: "By the same reasoning, a drowned man always comes to the surface! In the battle of price, between farm and town, things will not 'take care of themselves.' They never have."

He dropped his arm, came down hard upon his heels, and concluded: "Nothing ever happens unless men make it happen."

Without further outbursts the meeting adjourned.

He is a man unable to think as he is told. Never once in almost forty years of fighting has he been able to align himself comfortably with either the radical or the conservative forces of rural change. Constitutionally a pioneer, with a pioneer's individualism, he has fought in and out of both camps, and in between them, taking more or less cheerfully the fire from both. College conservatives and militant organization zealots alike would tell you stormily that H. P. Miller, while brilliant and an amazingly able farmer, was nothing better than a "Bolshevik."

At sixty-five, still vital, graceful, forceful, still doing a full day's work outdoors every day, "H. P." is still changing his mind. He has lost much of his faith in co-operation. He has a new plan. He believes that it will achieve all the economics of production that are claimed for corporate farming and that it is "something we farmers can make happen ourselves."

His present thinking, though he would perhaps not state it so, takes root in the idea of a new kind of landed aristocracy, an aristocracy not of pedigrees but of brain power and business achievement. It might be called an extended family agreement plan, with the ablest family leading the way.

"The day of the hundred-acre farm is gone." He leans forward, and makes a sweeping motion with his hand. "Gone! From now on farms are either going to be much larger or considerably smaller.

"The small ones will be around cities—knee and hoe operators, selling truck, more or less direct, into town. Personally, I'm not interested in that sort of farming.

"Out here—out where there's room—we're going to rip out our fences, throw our farms together, use more machinery, pool our operations, cut our costs and make money!"

"Co-operative farming or corporate?"

"Neither. Inter-family farming. The farms of this prairie will never be operated under city capital and city management. City men can learn enough to farm on paper, but to farm outdoors—that's something else. That's a matter of highly specialized, variable knowledge. You can't get it from books. You get it almost instinctively, working outdoors, day to day, year to year. The weather beats it into you.

"And another thing: when you're farming, whether it's managing a whole farm or just working by the day in the corn row, the hand and the head must be on the same body. The thing cannot be standardized. It's not at all like working at a machine indoors.

"No, there's not the slightest chance of big business stepping in and solving all our problems for us. Big business doesn't know enough. We'll have to do it ourselves.

"And here's how we'll do it: We will apply the overflow of specialized managerial capacity from those farms where there is a surplus of it to the farms that lack it. Each family will retain ownership of its own farm and will contract with other families for the operation of it.

"Here, concretely, is the proposal my sons are making to our neighbors around here: Rip out those fences. Sell your machinery. Keep your live stock if you want to. Continue your feeding. Keep on living on your own land, in your own house.

"We'll come in and farm your fields for you. We'll crop for you in the same way that threshermen have always come in and threshed for you. Plant, cultivate, harvest—the whole business. We'll do it on any basis you like best: on shares, by the acre, by the bushel or ton.

"We can do it. We know our costs. Cost-cutting is money-making. We've found that out here over a period of more than forty years. We've farmed right through two depressions, and have always come out all right.

"But our big advantage in this matter lies in this: I'm well past middle age, just as most of the other men around here are, but all their boys have gone—left them. No young blood—no real chance, therefore, to translate their farming into modern terms, engineering terms.

"In this day, when one man can take care of 120 acres of corn, they haven't got the machinery and can't afford it. A hundred-acre farm can't afford both a team and a tractor. Most of them get along with three horses; and one man directing a three-horse outfit in this day—it's economic suicide!

"I can take you out into any county of this state and show you farm after farm so cramped for space, so underequipped, that it can't possibly make money. The land is all right. The man may be all right. But he is trying without live stock or diversification to match his light teams and his little hundred acres at growing staples against fields as large as his whole farm, and against the practically unlimited iron horse power of farmers farther west.

"No wonder such fellows won't keep books! All bookkeeping could show is that their overhead is eating them up."

The Miller farmstead stands at the outskirts of the small town of Sunbury, on the central prairie of Ohio, just a little back from the road, an attractive, thoroughly modern, commodious house of gray stucco. To the left, by the road, is a tennis court, lit by electric lights on high poles, so that the boys can play, if they want to, after dark.

The barns and outbuildings surround the house and back from the grouped buildings stretch, with that slow, strong heave which distinguishes the Ohio prairie, the 290 acres that have more than forty years made a good living for this family, supplied it with every comfort and sent three boys through college, with two still to go.

Power plays each year an increasing role in the life of Fairland farm. They need no longer cut and haul ice; electricity freezes it for them in neat cubes right in the kitchen. And outdoors, electricity milks cows for them, shells corn, shears sheep, fans and stores grain, bales hay, saws wood and paints barns. The last is their latest discovery of wider use for electric current. They hooked it to a spray pump and one of the boys painted all of the largest barn in a day and a half.

The farm plan centers around corn, fed through live stock. The program is so diversified that it is almost impossible to catch an all-around off-market any year. The cash crops are milk, mutton, wool, eggs, pork and seeds. Some 250 ewes—Merinos, bred to purebred Dorset rams—produce about the same number of "hothouse" lambs a year. The farm sends lambs to market every month except two throughout the year. Milk checks come monthly, and egg money—from 675 White Leghorns, working under electric lights—is coming in all the time.

The head of the family said: "A boy rolling a buggy wheel frightened a horse. The horse ran away. And if that boy hadn't taken that notion to roll that buggy wheel like a hoop, I wouldn't have been born.

"That's how I sometimes sum up this whole business of agricultural improvement to myself, when I hear people getting too didactic about the causes of this or that. Or when I find myself getting too toplofty.

"The man who was driving that horse was my grandfather. He was badly hurt in the accident. He had to send for my father, who had established himself out in Iowa, way west.

"My father came back here, married here, resettled here; consequently I was born within four miles of this house in 1865, the autumn after the ending of the Civil war.

"I can honestly attribute four-fifths of what we've been able to do here to the fact that my father was the man he was.

"He gave me, of course, the first hundred acres of this land; but that was only a small part of it. It was just land, with a shell of a barn on it. It wasn't a farm; it was simply a spot on which to make a farm. I have put more into it, to the acre, than I could sell it for right now. And I have made it pay me a good living—because of qualities that my father gave me.

"He made me understand the value of precise information. In a day before there was any agricultural college he encouraged me to go to Antioch and study straight science, and later to Ohio State and take a degree in veterinary medicine.

"Not that I ever expected to practice. But 'A farmer,' he said, 'can never know too much.'

"He was a pioneer. There's still plenty of room for pioneering. Anyone is a pioneer who dares go out where it's lonesome, out of the herd."

Printing Blocks Made in China Centuries Ago

The oldest printing blocks in existence are on exhibition in a collection of bamboo, root and wood carvings from China at Chicago's Field Museum of Natural History.

The blocks are engraved with floral designs and must have been made before the year 1108 A. D. They were found in the ancient city of Chu-lu, in the southern part of the province of Chi-li. This city, excavated by archeologists in recent years, was submerged by a flood in 1108.

The Chinese are the inventors of block-printing, and, in fact, of all the essentials for printing—paper, writing brush, ink and ink-pallet or inkstone. They invented and perfected these entirely from their own resources, unaided by any other nation. Paper was invented and manufactured in China as early as 105 A. D.

Rash Disfigured Face

Disappeared After Using Cuticura

"A rash broke out on my face from some external irritation and spread very rapidly. The skin was red, and the rash burned and itched so that I scratched night and day. Then it developed into large spots or eruptions and disfigured my face. I tried different kinds of soaps, but had no success. I read about Cuticura Soap and Ointment and decided to send for a free sample. The result was so good that I bought more, and after using one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment the rash disappeared." (Signed) Herbert B. Skyles, R. D. 1, Vintondale, Pa.

Is a constant backache keeping you miserable? Do you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination; attacks of dizziness, rheumatic pains, swollen feet and ankles? Do you feel tired, nervous all unstrung?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly, for functional kidney disorder permits poisons to stay in the blood and upset the whole system.

Explaining to Canada Mr. Morgenthau's Work A West Point for Crime Alfred du Pont

Canada, hearing of a proposed United States "camouflaged military airplane base near her border," asks for information. The State department will gladly supply it.

Arthur Brisbane

No military forts separate the two countries, no battleships on the big lakes. Inhabitants on both sides, being civilized, have no idea of attacking each other; neither craves what the other owns.

Some day, let us hope, the two countries will be one, by mutual agreement, or Canada might annex the United States in a friendly way, if that were more acceptable, a majority of voters ruling.

The North American continent, from the Mexican border to the North pole, should be one nation, or if Mexico and others would come in, all the way down to the Panama canal, so much the better.

There will be no war between this country and any part of the British empire. Common sense forbids it. Any air base of ours would probably be as useful to Canada as to ourselves, and we should be delighted to see Canada establish a string of air bases to the north of us, especially along her Pacific and Atlantic coasts.

Secretary Morgenthau, never in business as a banker, interested, personally, in farming more than in money, has shown the outside world, to its surprise, that he can make the American dollar keep its place in the procession, regardless of many billions of bond issues, no gold basis, and other novelties.

Gamblers that ordinarily enjoy speculation in "exchange" are afraid of the American dollar. And curiously, while some Americans are sending money to other countries, to make it "safe," foreigners, and especially Britishers, are investing more and more heavily in the United States.

Washington discusses a "West Point for war on crime," a semi-military school under the attorney general to train fighters to meet the national crime army, that collects almost as much money as the national government itself takes in.

The war would be simple if government would treat crime as it would an outbreak of yellow fever, or Asiatic cholera, taking it really seriously.

Habitual criminals are known, men of ten or fifteen convictions, racketeers, gunmen. Make it clear that once locked up they would never get out as long as they lived and you would see the crime fade away.

Very bad news for this country, in which efficiency and energy count as public asset number one, is the sudden death of Alfred du Pont, stricken with heart disease in his residence near Jacksonville, Fla. At seventy years of age Mr. du Pont was planning, as he should be, all sorts of new enterprises that would have been interesting to him. He needed no more money, wanted to be useful.

Great Britain is excited about the Germans building submarines, especially annoyed to learn that the submarines are of a "super" type, carrying guns as well as torpedo tubes, able to hunt British or other ships anywhere on earth, some alleged to carry a small airplane, easily launched. Britain has plane-carrying submarines, but that is different. German submarines now finished are about to start maneuver practice off Wilhelmshafen.

Nations rise to great heights, glorious power, then crumble, disappear; desert sands cover their streets and temples. Patient archeology digs them out and wonders. Read Volney's "Ruins of Empires" to find that process well described.

What causes it? Do nations grow old and die "naturally," inevitably, as individuals do? Sometimes plagues wipe them out: the black death nearly destroyed Europe. Malaria tore down the power of Rome and recently killed some 50,000, following a sudden mosquito attack in the Far East.

You are not surprised to learn, in spite of pacifist protests and protests from certain Japanese who are not pacifists, the President thinks it wise to explore around and see just what this country needs in the way of "defense methods" on the Pacific.

A crime, unbelievable, has been reported from Texas. Howard Pierson, aged twenty, killed his mother and father, then shot himself in the arm, pretending that bandits had done it.

After police had kept him awake for awhile he confessed, said he did it "for revenge."

He did it actually, authorities declared, for $17,000 insurance on his father's life. He killed the mother because she would have got the insurance.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HISTORIC HEAT WAVE

JUNE, 1920. In the city of Chicago for six days the temperature had been above 90 degrees. Delegates to the Republican national convention had sweltered through those six days with nerves worn to a frazzle. There was a deadlock between the two leading candidates, Gov. Frank O. Lowden and Gen. Leonard Wood.

Then the "Senatorial Group," which had engineered the deadlock, got busy and offered for a compromise candidate, Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio. The hot, weary convention was ready to take anybody, so enough votes were switched to Harding to insure his nomination.

Next a candidate for Vice President had to be chosen. The "Senatorial Group" had planned to give this honor to Senator Irvine L. Lenroot of Wisconsin—thus making it an all-senatorial ticket. But there was an unlooked-for interruption to their steamroller plan. Medill McCormick of Illinois was making the speech for Lenroot when, from the floor of the convention hall, Wallace McCamant, a delegate from Oregon, leaped to his feet.

He called out, "We want Coolidge! We want Coolidge!" Others took up the cry. When McCormick finished his speech and turned to leave the platform, McCamant shouted, "I nominate Gov. Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts for Vice President.

The stampede was under way. The perspiring delegates, disgusted with the "Senatorial Group" for the deadlock which had kept them sweltering for nearly a week in expensive hotels, saw a chance to retaliate. The engineers of the steam roller could not crush the uprising and Coolidge was nominated.

When Harding died in 1923, Coolidge became President. And the man who was sent to the White House by a heat-wave was re-elected with help of a slogan, "Keep Cool with Coolidge!"

POCKETFUL OF DESTINY

IT WAS the night of December 25, 1776. In the home of the Tory, Mr. Hunt, in Trenton, N. J., Col. Johann Gottlieb Rall and his Hessian officers were celebrating Christmas with much song and good cheer, the latter poured from tall bottles. A Tory named Wall knocked on the door. On the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware river he had seen Gen. George Washington's "rebel army" launching boats in the ice-choked stream.

Denied admittance by Rall's negro slave, the Tory hastily scribbled a note of warning. The bleary-eyed colonel glanced at the scrap of paper and saw it was written in English. He would ask Mr. Hunt to read it to him later. So he stuffed it into his waistcoat pocket. When he stumbled away at dawn, the forgotten message was still unread.

Three hours later Washington and his Continentals stormed into Trenton. The sleepy, liquor-befuddled Rall tried to rally his Hessians to stem the onslaught. But it was in vain. He went down with two bullets in his body. They carried him into a church and laid him on a bench to die.

Out of his pocket fell a scrap of paper. As he listened to what was written on it, he groaned "If I had read that at Mr. Hunt's, I'd not be here . . ." Johann Gottlieb Rall held the destiny of a nation in his pocket and didn't know it. For Washington's victory at Trenton revived the waning hopes of the Patriots and helped them carry on to final success.

DESERTER'S KNAPSACK

IT WAS just a ragged deserter's knapsack . . . full of rations.

A Union army, commanded by Gen. U. S. Grant, was on the way to attack Fort Donelson, Tenn. They were weary when the command came to halt. The staff officers surrounded their commander-in-chief and talked over the advisability of continuing the march. They all agreed that their men would be more eager for the coming fight if they stopped the march and took 24 hours rest.

The general listened to their comments and then called his aide. "Bring me that deserter who came in early today," he ordered. Then he turned to his astonished officers. "We will see what we can find out before we give any final orders."

The deserter was brought in and Grant took away his knapsack, rummaging around in its contents while he questioned the owner. "Where are you from?" he asked. "Fort Donelson," replied the deserter. "When were these rations issued?" snapped the general. "Yesterday morning—we all got the same," answered the worried target of the general's barrage.

Grant looked triumphantly at his staff. "Gentlemen," he said, "six days' rations are not issued to men in a fort if they intend to stay there and fight! This means a retreat is planned. We will attack at once!"

They did, with the subsequent result that Fort Donelson, a key point in the Confederate line of defense in the West, fell into Union hands.

Unique "Primrose" Rug to Crochet

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

This rag rug measures 42 inches and requires about three pounds of material to finish. It appears to be made of six squares each of a different size, with the horizontal positions alternating. Work is started with the center square about 5 inches in diameter. Triangles are then crocheted on the four sides of inner square forming the second square. Continue same way for third, fourth and fifth squares. The sixth square is the same size as fifth square and therefore requires smaller triangles on sides than the others. Colors should be so arranged that center is in light shades of yellow, while outer triangles represent the petals of flowers, and may be shaded in color desired. This can be made into a very attractive and unique rug, depending very much on the color scheme used.

This is one of the twenty-six crocheted and braided rugs illustrated with instructions in Grandmother Clark's rug book No. 25. Detailed instructions are given in this book for the "Primrose" rug, and if you are interested, send 15c to our Rug Department and we will send it to you by mail.

When sugar was first made from beets it required about 20 tons of beets to produce one ton of sugar; now it requires but six tons, the change being due to scientific production of beets.

Uncover Mayan Cities Fifteen Centuries Old

Carnegie institution scientists probing the dense jungles of Guatemala and Honduras have made new discoveries in connection with the ancient Mayan civilization which flourished in Central America when a few people still lived who could remember the crucifixion of Christ. Under many feet of deposited silt and tangled vegetation they have found cities once populous and richly built with palaces and temples, but deserted now for 15 centuries. One ruined city in particular in northern Guatemala has attracted attention. It is surrounded by a moat very similar to those used extensively centuries later in Europe. Originally the ditch was about ten feet deep and ten feet wide. It was spanned in different places by seven masonry bridges, and was connected with a nearby swamp so that during the rainy season it was filled with water. This is the first moated city ever found in America and it is not certain whether it was used as a means of protection against raiding tribes or whether it had a religious meaning. In Honduras an expedition has uncovered two stone altars and many monuments. All were ornately carved with the picture writing of the ancient Mayas which leaves us a record of their empire.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Washington Kin

Miss Anne Washington, Middleport, Ohio, asserts she is a closer kin to George Washington than Miss Anne A. Madison Washington, who flew with Maj. James Doolittle over Washington's Colonial trails recently. Miss Washington bases her assertion on the fact that she is a granddaughter of Andrew Park, Baltimore merchant, who married Harriett, favorite niece of George and daughter of Samuel, George's full brother.

MAN FLIES WITH WINGS

Daytona Beach, Fla.—Clem Sohn, a parachute jumper, recently jumped off an airplane 12,000 feet up. He wore wings across his shoulders and attached to his arms and wrists. His legs supported a webbing which when spread, gave him a plane surface similar to a bird's tail.

He dropped 2,000 feet and then spread out his arms, checking his descent. For a while he glided, then he zoomed right and left, shot upward and downward and looped 3 times. At 6,000 feet he pulled the rip cord of his parachute and settled to earth.

$5 Bills Float Though The Air

Detroit.—Pedestrians were flabbergasted when five dollar bills floated through the air, but discovered that they were counterfeits made by a gang, just raided by Federal agents. The Secret ervice recovered approximately $5,000 of the bills which had been thrown from a window in a downtown hotel. Some of the bills floated for blocks in a high wind before reaching the ground.

IOWA PLANTS MORE THAN 10,000,000 TREES AND SHRUBS

Des Moines.—More than ten million trees and shrubs have been planted in Iowa during the past 16 months, a report by John R. Fitzsimmons, landscape architect for the board of conservation, showed.

The report listed the planting of 9,797,833 black locust trees by CCC workers and the forestry department, in connection with soil erosion control. The CCC and the forestry department also planted 33,916 trees in shelter belts and wood lots during the year.

More than 440,000 trees and shrubs were planted in state parks under the board of conservation during the last 16 months, the report showed. Native trees and shrubs were transported into game management areas with the help of relief labor.

DO YOU KNOW?

That this is the season of the year when many people are poioned by coming in contact with Poison Ivy, Poison Sumac, Poison Oak, while on outdoor excursions? It is well for everyone to remember:

"Berries red, have no dread!
Berries white, poisonous sight!
Leaves three, quickly flee!"

That the Conservation Board and the Fish and Game Commission have been consolidated; That under the new consolidation law, the Game Wardens will be known as Conservation Officers?

That the important thing for game birds at this season of the year is to see that they have suitable places to nest?

FISHING NONE TOO GOOD ON OPENING DAY AT CLEAR LAKE

Klemme nimrods who tried their skill at catching the finny tribe at Clear Lake on opening day, Wednesday, May 15th, came home with more or less empty strings.

The weather has not been favorable for good fishing as yet. A few of the more lucky or more expert fishermen caught a few nice ones, and very few reports reached us of the ones who caught their limit.

Any fish of legal size, except small and large mouth black bass, may be taken from the waters of Clear Lake this season. The bass season will open June 15th.

We Shall Not Sleep

By Lieut. Col. Dr. John McCrae

"In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place; and in the sky
The larks still bravely singing fly,
Scarce heard amidst the guns below

We are the dead;
Short days ago we lived,
Felt Dawn,
Saw sunset glow,
Loved and were loved,
And now we lie
In Flanders fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe;
To you from falling hands
We throw the torch—
Be yours to hold it high;
If ye break faith
With us who die,
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
In Flanders fields."

FOR OUR HEROES

By Mrs. J. E. Leslie

Sound the taps softly
For heroes asleep
Strew flowers richly,
Our loyalty keep

Sing their songs bravely—
"We're Tenting Tonight,"
"Marching Through Georgia,"
And "Justice and Right."

Songs for the Riders
Who took San Juan hill,
"A Hot Time" and "Dolly"
We're singing them still.

Songs of the laddies
Who marched 'Over There"
"Keep the Fires Burning,"
And "Pack Up Your Cares."

Songs for our heroes,
Sweet flowers for them, too.
Soldiers in khaki
And brave boys in bluue.

Banners wave o'er them
And tears for them shed,
From Shiloh to Flanders,
Our loved, honored dead.

PROGRAM WILL BE HELD AT KLEMME PARK

Legion and Auxiliary Services Will Be Given At Cemetery

Thursday, May 30th, is Memorial Day, and appropriate services will be observed in Klemme with a program to be given in the park, followed by a procession to the cemetery and services will be given there by the Legion and Auxiliary of Klemme. The program will be carried out approximately as published.

The years have brought changes in Memorial day, but fundamentally it remains the same. When Gen. J. A. Logan, as commander in chief of of Grand Army of the Republic asked a general observance of May 30 as memorial day, a custom began that devoted its attention chiefly to decorating the graves of soldiers and sailors who had been killed in the war. Men and women of middle years remember how the veterans of that war, still stalwart and vigorous, slowed the pace of their Memorial day march to accomodate a few feeble survivors of the war with Mexico. All the Mexican war soldiers are gone. Seventy years after the surrender at Appomattox the surviving soldiers of the Civil war stand in the same relationship as did their brothers in arms who enlisted for battle with Mexico. Out of the thousands of G. A. R. members who once took the lead in Memorial day plans, but few remain, and they have lived out the Scripture's allotted span.

As the goal of every war is peace so the struggle for peace throughout the world becomes more significant on Memorial day. It is on this day more than others that the toll of war is seen in the long rows of white-crossed graves at home and abroad, and where the little flags wave in cemeteries throughout America. On this Memorial day the nation yearns for the maintenance of an honorable peace with other nations, near and far. It views with dismay the race among competing nations for more powerful military establishments, and it renews its ancient pledge, to meet them 'round a conference table, so that war will be no more, and that justice and reason may rule where conflict once held sway.

Stores Will Close

A number of Klemme business places have signified their intention of following their annual custom of remaining open until 10:00 a. m. and then closing for the balance of the day. Those who have shopping to do will arrange to transact their business before closing time and should bear in mind that the stores will be open on Wednesday evening.

ANNUAL POPPY DAY SALE IS THIS WEEK SATURDAY

The Klemme Auxiliary ladies are holding their annual Poppy Day Sale this week Saturday. Buy a poppy and wear it on Memorial day. This is a good cause and the Times urges everyone to lend support to this splendid annual event sponsored by the Auxiliary.

Free Movies Popular

Free movies are presented in Klemme every Saturday night. Despite the rather cool weather there was a capacity crowd at each movie this spring.

The Free Movies will be shown thruout the summer months again this year.

PILSUDSKI'S DEATH WORRIES STATESMEN OF EUROPE—FLEET MANEUVERS.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
©, Western Newspaper Union.

COMPLICATIONS in the already precarious European situation were expected to result from the death of Marshal Josef Pilsudski, the virtual dictator of Poland. The "father of his country" succumbed to cancer of the stomach in Warsaw and his death was a great shock to the Poles for the serious nature of his affliction had been concealed from the public. The marshal's heart was interred at Vilna and his brain was given to science, according to his request; but his body was buried in the cathedral of Rawel castle at Crakow beside those of King John Sobieski, Thaddeus Kosciuszko and others of Poland's great men.

Pilsudski held only the office of minister of war, but was the real ruler of Poland, and there was anxious speculation as to his successor. Some observers thought this might be Col. Josef Beck, the foreign minister, who was especially close to the marshal. Other candidates were Alexander Prystor, former premier, and the present premier, Col. Walery Slawek.

The iron-willed marshal had been a consistent advocate of a close rapprochement between Poland and Germany, sternly curbing the activities of those who favored the course of breaking away from the reich and standing with France in her policies for eastern Europe. Pilsudski was rather offended by the recently signed pact between France and Russia, and French Foreign Minister Laval stopped in Warsaw on his way to Moscow to try to pacify him; but the marshal was too ill to take part in the discussions and Laval went on to Russia without even seeing him.

The government announced it would continue to function as though Pilsudski were alive. The authority of the dictator, it said, has passed to his lifelong friends, President Ignace Moscicki, Premier Slawek, Foreign Minister Beck and Gen. Edward Rydz-Smigly. The appointment of General Rydz-Smigly as Pilsudski's successor as inspector general of the army was in accordance with the marshal's command.

The government denied any changes were impending. It announced that both the internal and foreign policies which Pilsudski inaugurated will be followed faithfully by the men he had trained for executive positions.

RIGID censorship, such as would be imposed in war time, shrouded the American fleet's tactical operations in the Pacific, but was relaxed enough for the announcement of two unfortunate occurrences. While destroyers were leading larger vessels through an "enemy" network of submarines the Lea smashed into the Sicard, tearing a big hole in her side. Richard Chadwick, second class gunner's mate on the Sicard, was killed and three other men were slightly injured, official records stated.

Commander E. W. Tod.

Lieut. Mathias B. Wyatt of San Diego, a graduate of the naval academy, was piloting one of eighteen fighting planes which took off from the aircraft carrier Saratoga 200 miles east of Honolulu to ward off an attack of "enemy" submarines. His plane was caught in the slipstream from another and fell into water three miles deep. No trace of him or his ship was found.

In connection with the maneuvers the greatest interest was in the mass flight of forty-three planes from the Pearl Harbor naval base westward, presumably to Midway islands. They were under the command of Commander E. W. Tod, U. S. N., and for the time being all that the public was permitted to know was that they reached their secret destination safely and were "executing their missions." One report was that the planes made one stop en route and that forty-one of them finished the flight together, two arriving later.

REAR ADMIRAL RICHARD EVELYN BYRD and members of his South Polar expedition came sailing home at last on their ship Bear of Oakland and were given the warmest kind of a welcome in Washington by President Roosevelt, Secretary of the Navy Swanson, other officials and a host of their relations and personal friends. The admiral and Mrs. Byrd spent a night in the White House. Then he was joined by his mother, Mrs. Eleanor Bolling Byrd, and his four children, and the family party left for the Byrd home at Winchester, Va. The Bear of Oakland and the Jacob Ruppert, supply ship of the expedition, departed from the Washington navy yard for Boston, the admiral planning to board the Ruppert en route.

Admiral Byrd

Admiral Byrd has plenty of work ahead, with the mass of data gathered in the Antarctic, a book to be written and a lecture tour to be made, but his plans for the immediate future were uncertain. "I would like to take a little vacation," he said. "Perhaps it will be in the Maine woods, where it will be cool."

THE administration's program in the senate was delayed by a renewal of Huey Long's attack on Postmaster General Farley. The Louisiana senator called up his resolution for an investigation of Farley and produced some new charges, and a protracted debate ensued. Long submitted an affidavit made by Helen Humphreys, a former employee of the James A. Stewart company, New York contractors, accusing Farley of manipulating government contracts and giving valuable stamps to prospective purchasers of materials from the General Builders' Supply corporation, Farley's firm. These stamps were so valuable, Long charged, that a bank lent $40,000 on them.

BY A vote of about 2 to 1 the striking workers in the Toledo Chevrolet plant decided to accept a compromise offer that had been fixed up by federal labor committeemen, A. F. of L. leaders, company officials and federal mediators. It was expected that this would result in the return to work of 35,000 men in Toledo and other motor car manufacturing centers. The strike in Toledo was engineered by the local union and really was not in accord with the plans of the American Federation of Labor.

RURAL electrification administration, one of the new divisions of the works relief program, was established by President Roosevelt in an executive order, and Morris L. Cooke, a Philadelphia engineer, was appointed to be its chief. The sum of $75,000 was allotted for its administrative expenses, and allocations are to be made later for authorized individual projects.

M. L. Cooke

The executive order described the duties and functions of the new unit as "to initiate, formulate, administer and supervise a program of approved projects with respect to the generation, transmission and distribution of electrical energy in rural areas."

The order permits the administrator to acquire by purchase or by the power of eminent domain any real property or any interest therein and improve, develop, grant, sell, lease or otherwise dispose of any such property.

DENNIS CHAVEZ, who contended that he really defeated Bronson M. Cutting in the election of a United States senator from New Mexico last year, now has Mr. Cutting's seat in the senate. Following the senator's death in an airplane crash, Mr. Chavez was appointed by Gov. Clyde Tingley to fill the vacancy. He will hold office until the next general election in November, 1936, when a successor will be elected, and that is likely to be Mr. Chavez again.

Dennis Chavez

The new senator, who is the head of the Democratic party in New Mexico, was born in that state 47 years ago. While serving as a senate clerk he attended Georgetown university law school and after returning to Albuquerque to practice law he was elected to the state legislature. In 1930 he was elected New Mexico's one representative in the national house and was re-elected in 1932. He resigned in 1934 to oppose Cutting in the senatorial race and was defeated by about 1,000 votes.

EXTENSION of the NRA for one year, and not for two as asked by President Roosevelt, is advocated by the American Liberty league, which in a statement issued from Washington says the resolution offered by Senator Bennett Clark is the most feasible method of rescuing business from bureaucracy and experimentation.

"Commendation is due to the senate finance committee, which voted out the resolution of Senator Clark rather than the administration bill of Senator Harrison," the league said. "The bill has all the earmarks of a tricky attempt to avoid a definite determination of the constitutional validity of the recovery act through a decision of the Supreme court.

"The shifting of the legal foundation of the NRA might permit its continuance, following an adverse decision, until new test cases could be advanced through successive steps to the highest court.

"The Clark resolution, aside from its advantages, is free from any attempt to prevent the courts of the nation from fulfilling their constitutional duty of passing upon the validity of the legislation."

SEVENTEEN years ago the first official government air mail service between New York and Washington was established, when Lieut. Torrey Webb in an army plane started from Belmont Park, L. I., for the National Capital with a load of mail. The anniversary was celebrated at Newark airport with the opening of the new $500,000 administration building, federal, state and New York city officials taking part in the program. Amelia Putnam dedicated a new amphibian plane, and one of the original six army mail flyers, Lieut. Edwin W. Kilgore of Short Hills, N. J., was among those present.

BECAUSE the Patman inflation bonus bill would be easier for the President to veto than the Vinson measure, some of the administration senators joined with the Patman followers to put the former bill through the senate by a vote of 55 to 33. Previously, for some devious reason, the senators put aside the compromise measure offered by Pat Harrison's committee with the assurance that Mr. Roosevelt would sign it. That the President would veto the Patman bill was taken as a certainty and it was believed the inflationists could not gather enough votes to override the veto in the senate, though they had enough in the house.

Rep. Patman

Rather surprisingly, Senator William G. McAdoo of California, a former secretary of the treasury, advocated the Patman bill, asserting that it was "a mere 'conjecture' that the issue of $2,200,000,000 in noninterest bearing notes, or greenbacks, would be inflationary.

"We have nothing in the United States today but greenbacks," he said. "Is your money redeemable in gold? Is it redeemable in silver? No. It is redeemable in nothing but the honor and good faith of the American people.

"What constitutes inflation is a matter of conjecture. It is also a mere conjecture that we must have a so-called specie basis. The best proof of that is that, since going off gold, the dollar is as sound as it ever was.

"The issuance of $2,000,000,000 in new currency would affect the credit of the United States about as much as if I threw a shovelful of sand into the ocean and tried to stop the incoming tide."

Some friends of the measure, after the President indicated he would veto it, decided it might be better to amend it than to lose it entirely. They proposed to give the President the choice of several ways of paying the bonus certificates.

ACCORDING to the Department of Justice, its plans for the establishment in Washington of a national crime institute and a central radio station for broadcasting police news are nearing completion. An advisory committee has made a preliminary report on the crime institute, and 200 local police officials have warmly endorsed the suggestion of J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the division of criminal investigation, for the establishment of the radio station.

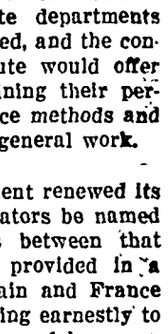
A modest beginning for the training school, crime laboratory and "clearing house," to be known as the National Crime Institute, was suggested by the advisory subcommittee, headed by Justin Miller, special assistant to the attorney general.

About twelve states, including New York, Illinois and Ohio, have already started or completed plans for coordinating police and law-enforcement activities through state departments of justice, it was revealed, and the contemplated crime institute would offer them facilities for training their personnel in scientific police methods and for co-ordinating their general work.

ETHIOPIA'S government renewed its demand that arbitrators be named to settle the disputes between that country and Italy, as provided in a treaty, and Great Britain and France were reported to be trying earnestly to persuade Italy to a peaceful course. Unless settlement of all differences is assured at the League of Nations council meeting May 20, or if more Italian troops are sent to the Ethiopian border, Emperor Haile Selassie will mobilize his warriors.

Foreign residents of Addis Ababa said they were ignorant of any war preparations by Ethiopia, and that there had been no troops or munitions concentrations or censorship on travel. This contradicted a story in a Rome newspaper to the effect that great quantities of munitions had been shipped into Ethiopia and were being concentrated, along with thousands of troops, near the borders of Italian Somaliland and Eritrea.

FROM Mexico City to the Metropolitan airport at Newark, N. J., nonstop, 2,100 miles in 14 hours and 22 minutes. That is the new record set up by Amelia Earhart in her red monoplane. Her husband, George Palmer Putnam, and more than 3,000 other enthusiastic persons were at the airport to welcome her, and she was almost mobbed by the throng.



Amelia Earhart

After her start from Mexico City, Mrs. Putnam was not heard from nor reported seen for more than six hours. Her course took her straight east at first, high over the mountain peaks between the Mexican capital and Tampico. She was not seen at the oil port, nor was she reported by radio. Observers knew, however, that she expected to be above 10,000 feet as she crossed the shoreline out over the gulf for her 690 mile hop over the water to New Orleans.

Passing over New Orleans, she communicated by radio with the Department of Commerce station there, and then flew swiftly along the airways of American Air Lines and Eastern Air Lines. As she swooped over Hoover airport, Washington, Eugene Vidal, director of the air commerce bureau, radioed: "You have done a splendid job, so come down." But Amelia replied, with thanks for the invitation, that she was going on through.

Farmers to Plant More Than in 1934

Crop Acres Expected to Be Within 5 Per Cent of 1932 Harvest.

Prepared by Ohio State University Agricultural Extension Service.
WNU Service.

Reports from 46,000 farmers in all parts of the country, reflecting the plans of all, indicate that they intend to plant 17 per cent more crop acres, exclusive of cotton acreage, than the greatly reduced acreage that was harvested last year.

Although indications, when the poll was taken, pointed to a larger harvest than last year's, the 1935 acreage is expected to be about 5 per cent less than the harvested acreage in 1932.

The reduction below the 1932 acreage level, according to Guy W. Miller of the department of rural economics, Ohio State university, is due to crop control programs, unfavorable seeding conditions in the drouth area, shortage and high cost of seed, and reduced requirements for feed following recent liquidation of live stock.

Corn producers intend to plant about 96,000,000 acres, slightly more than were planted last year but nearly 8,000,000 acres more than were harvested.

Spring wheat intentions point to an 18,000,000 acre crop. Last year not more than 9,000,000 acres of spring wheat were worth harvesting.

Farmers expect to plant 29 per cent more land to oats this year than were harvested a year ago.

Should present plans materialize, burley tobacco acreage will remain nearly the same as it was last year.

Little change was reported in potato planting intentions. Planted acreage is expected to be less than 1 per cent under the harvested acreage of last year. Ohio growers plan an acreage cut of 3 per cent.

Increases are expected also in acreage of soy beans and barley. But hay plantings, owing to seed shortages, are expected to decline.

Ventilated Silo Is Used in New Hay-Making Plan

This is a changing world and it would not be surprising to see a change in the process of hay-making. In fact, it has already arrived, declares a writer in the Wisconsin Agriculturist. The putting up of hay, both by the sugar process and the acid process, is practical and can be applied to almost any kind of forage. Hay canning is also being used. This is simply a ventilated silo where the hay is put either cured or partially cured and by ventilation the curing process goes on without combustion. Large hay barns are not only expensive but there is always considerable danger of fire. By ensiling the hay directly from the field there is no loss caused by woody fiber, moldy or spoiled hay caused by rains, or dusty moldy hay that has been put up improperly cured. Simply a few silos will furnish storage for all the roughage and it will be in the finest condition for feeding. Less barn space will be required and the animals will always receive fresh succulent balanced rations.

Bees by the Pound

There are approximately 5,000 bees in a pound and they may be obtained in packages holding one or more pounds, but the two-pound size appears to be the most popular for all purposes. There are, however, many beekeepers who prefer a three-pound package, thinking that the extra pound of bees will enable the new colony to build up more rapidly. But, says a prominent apiarist, experiments with the two sizes of packages do not seem to warrant this assumption, for the two-pound packages will usually build up as rapidly and store just as much honey as do the three-pound packages. If the bees are young and the loss during transportation not excessive, there are enough of them in a two-pound package to care for all the brood that can be produced by the queen, and the colony will build up just as well without the excess workers.

Temporary Pastures

Winter wheat may be seeded in the spring at the rate of two bushels to the acre for a good early summer pasture, says the Prairie Farmer. Oats, seeded heavily (three to four bushels) will supply a lot of feed during June, July and even August if the rainfall is sufficient. Sudan grass is the most dependable crop for midsummer pasture. If seeded shortly after corn planting time it will be ready for pasture early in July and will furnish feed until frost. If alfalfa, clover or grass seed mixtures are sown with oats or wheat, the seeding will come along better when the grain crop is pastured than it will if cut for grain. Amount of grain seed should be reduced if grass and clovers are seeded with it.

Curb Berry Bushes

Minnesota, seeking to control the white pine blister rust, has decided to restrict the planting of gooseberry and currant bushes. The organism of the rust attacks the white pines with serious effect, but only after being harbored on the gooseberry or currant plants. The berry bushes are vital to the life of the rust. Tests have indicated that the rust spores will carry as far as ten miles from a single bush and it is hoped to obviate further trouble.

Puzzle for Solomon

The senate votes, 55 to 33, to pay the veterans their bonus in cash. That vote, not being a two-thirds vote, would not overrule the Presidential veto, which is expected.

Arthur Brisbane

The Patman bill, wisely approved, gives the veterans their money to spend in their way for things they want. Under that bill veterans are to be paid with new money. That money as soon as received would all vanish, in purchases in every corner of the United States.

New United States money is exactly as good as new bonds, since paper dollars and paper bonds get all their value from the name of the government printed on them. There are no longer any gold payments promised or implied. If government money is not good, government bonds are not good.

President Roosevelt, congratulating King George, says: "It is gratifying to contemplate the wise and steadfast influence which your majesty has exerted for a quarter of a century." That was about all that the President, with the best of intentions, could say, for the British ruler's popularity is based on sticking to his job, which is, letting his people alone, while they attend to their business in their own way.

The king seems to think that those who have built the greatness of the British empire to its present height may be trusted to continue building it.

Some "best minds" here feel that any success or progress in the United States has been more or less of an accident, under bad management, and needs to start again on a new plan.

Time will tell whether a government policy of "let them alone" or "tell them how" is better.

Five killed, eight injured, in an airplane crash. The dead include Senator Cutting of New Mexico, who will be deeply regretted by his state and by the senate.

Flying in fog, fuel gave out. The last radio message was: "Fuel's getting low. We can't find a break in the fog. It looks like a forced landing."

Both pilots were killed; they did their best.

An occasional disaster will not discourage flying, but this particular accident raises again the question, Should not airplane builders concentrate on parachute protection for passengers?

King Solomon never solved any such problem as this: A New York manufacturer wished to advertise "invisible panties," in usual words—small trousers worn by modern women. NRA rules say that if the article advertised is not invisible, the advertising is "false and misleading and violates the code." If those panties are invisible, NRA cannot pass on them, and their manufacturer must not attempt to display them on models, for evident reasons dealing with morality.

Eight million young women in Germany are unmarried. The government invites 333,000 of them to marry "healthy, virile, hereditary farmers."

To lead the unmarried German girl to the "virile, hereditary farmer" may be easier than making her marry him.

A labor law compels women under twenty-five years of age to serve one year on farms before they can take other jobs.

Once you begin to tell human beings how they must live, life becomes complicated.

Pope Pius, addressing 130 German pilgrims, spoke plainly about Germany's present Hitler government:

"They wish in the name of so-called positive Christianity to dechristianize Germany, and they wish to conduct the country back to barbaric paganism, and nothing is left undone to disturb Christian and Catholic life."

The pope's words referred to the unpleasant welcome home of 2,000 young German pilgrims that went to Rome to receive the papal blessing.

Harry L. Hopkins, federal emergency relief administrator, uses language as plain as that of Mussolini or Stalin. He finds that we have in America a class of "oppressors," rich men, and promises that that small, oppressive, business minority "who extol poverty and profits in the same breath" shall be made outcasts in the "new order" that is coming.

One English town will celebrate the king's jubilee by distributing free beer. Might it not be a good idea to make light beer part of the regular food supply of men in this government's CCC camps?

Minus government tax, it would cost little, keep men contented, abolish or diminish complaints of some workers spending their small supplies of money with bootleggers.

TRENDS FAVORABLE IN STATE BANKING

Recent Figures Indicate Large Increases in Deposits and Invested Funds

Improvement in the condition of state banks in almost every respect during 1934 is shown by statistics recently assembled, Robert M. Hanes, President Wachovie Bank and Trust Company, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, points out in an article in "Banking" published by the American Bankers Association. The figures on which this statement is based were gathered by the Committee on State Bank Research of the association from reports furnished by state bank supervisors throughout the country.

"Ever since 1921 the number of state banks has been declining," Mr. Hanes says. "Between 1931 and 1934 the decline was rapid. Figures for December 31, 1934, showed that the downward trend has not yet ended, but the decline last year was the smallest in twelve years."

There are now, he says, about ten thousand state banks, which term includes all state chartered institutions with the exception of mutual savings banks. The article continues:

"Even more significant was the ending of the decline of deposits in state banks which had been going on since the collapse of the stock market boom in 1929. In recent years for which figures are available the drop has been particularly abrupt. Total deposits in state banks declined from $20,395,762,000 on December 31, 1931, to $15,424,823,000 on December 31, 1933. The record for 1934 shows a recovery to $17,508,766,000 at the year-end.

Significance of Increased Deposits

"It is particularly gratifying to note the expansion of deposits, since it was their decline which made necessary the liquidation of investments, the calling of loans, and all the other phenomena which go under the name of 'deflation' and have brought banks so much criticism in recent years. It is now plain that this was due to efforts of the banks to place themselves in the possession of enough liquid assets to meet the growing demands of depositors for the return of a part of the money which had been placed on deposit.

"That this is true is borne out by the movement of invested funds of state banks, which has paralleled that of deposits. These invested funds (loans and discounts plus investments) for state banks, dropped from $20,291,320,000, at the end of 1931, to $14,915,773,000 at the end of 1933. By December 31, 1934, however, they had recovered to $15,769,510,000. All of this gain is accounted for by the increase in investments during 1934, the expansion amounting to approximately $1,300,000,000.

"As for loans and discounts, they registered a slight drop again in 1934, but the rate of decline was much smaller than in previous years, which in itself is progress. Whereas the drop in loans and discounts amounted to approximately $3,300,000,000 in 1932, and to approximately $1,300,000,000 in 1933, it was less than $500,000,000 in 1934.

"In another respect the balance sheet figures for December 31, 1934, were especially impressive. Bills payable and rediscounts of the state banks, which at the end of 1932 had reached a depression . high of $669,709,000, had dropped by the close of last year to the low figure of $82,101,000. One must search the records as far back as 1917 to find bills payable and rediscounts of state banks at a lower figure. Moreover, it is reasonable to expect a further reduction of such borrowings during the current year."

TO FOIL BANK CROOKS

NEW YORK.—The American Bankers Association Protective Committee has developed a plan of bank inspection to bring out exposure hazards or weak spots in respect to attacks by criminals based on its long-established, nation-wide experience in investigating bank burglaries, holdups and sneak thefts.

The inspection covers eighty leading questions and seventeen recommendations which are instructive in the prevention of such crimes. These relate to such subjects as the use of alarms and other protective equipment, also the condition of windows, doors, skylights and other entrances which have facilitated the early morning entry of bandits who kidnap bank employees from their homes during the night, or break into the bank premises and bind and gag the employees

BANKERS HELP

"Save the Land and You Save the Man" is the essence of a suggested agricultural program recommended by the Arkansas Bankers Agricultural Committee. "Beware of impoverished soil. It leads to impoverished homes," says a statement sent to the banks to be distributed to their farmer customers. "To help nature save the land, build up the soil, by:

a. Stopping soil erosion.
b. Planting legumes.
c. Raising livestock.
d. Developing pastures.

"Look ahead with confidence—know what you are doing, therefore:

1. Draw up a farm inventory.
2. Keep a record, daily or weekly.
3 Budget expense, and keep w[illegible] it."

NATURAL FORCES AID BUSINESS RECOVERY

By R. S. HECHT
President American Bankers Association

ALTHOUGH, as official studies of business conditions show, business is still far from having struck its full stride, nevertheless, I believe that it is undoubtedly true that the natural economical processes which have always brought the nation out of a slump are now and have been for some time steadily at work laying the foundations for more active and normal business conditions.

R. S. HECHT

I believe that there is growing a broader public perception that the people of this country must make their own prosperity and not wait for the Government at Washington to make it for them. In other words, normal economic vigor and vitality of the United States is slowly but inevitably bringing a return of natural business recovery.

The Fundamental Cure

Like a doctor, the administration can help nature. But the fundamental healing processes will come from natural causes and not from political remedies. Despite the slackening of business now apparent, despite expressions of disappointment we hear from various quarters, nevertheless I am confident that these fundamental healing processes, if not spectacular, are none the less surely at work.

Gradually our business leaders are showing greater confidence in the future and are assuming a more forward looking position. I firmly believe that if we will make up our minds to replace fear-psychology with confidence-psychology the results will fully justify such a new attitude.

BANKERS' ASSOCIATION STIMULATES ADVERTISING

The American Bankers Association's Advertising Department reports rapid progress of the use by banks of the informative bank newspaper advertising prepared by it for members to assist them in rebuilding public confidence and good will in their communities.

The central theme of this advertising service deals with the "essential line of economic and social service that all sound banking inherently renders the depositor and the public," the report says, showing that "it is not banking laws which make banking useful and safe, but that fundamentally it is honesty and skill in management under private initiative."

The Advertising Department is supplying about a thousand members of the association with newspaper and other advertising material. The newspaper material totals about 50,000 advertisements annually. The growth of the work of the department is shown by the following figures: On September 1, 1934, the number of banks being served regularly each month was 623. The total number on April 1, 1935, was 924, an increase of 301 regular subscribers, or 49 per cent in a period of seven months.

WARS ON BANK ROBBERS

National Bankers Association Pressing Active Steps to Protect Members— Losses Cut

Imprisonment or death of many desperate bank criminals the past year has brought no appreciable reduction in attacks on banks, James E. Baum, in charge of the American Bankers Association Protective Department, has reported to his organization.

In the six months ended February 28, 1935, he says, banks were targets for 169 daylight holdups and 40 night burglaries. He added that although banks that are not members number only about half those enrolled in the association, they suffered a far greater rate of attack, namely, 51 per cent of all the bank robberies committed during the period.

Losses Show Decrease

During the period under report, bank burglars and bandits exacted tribute amounting to $943,551 compared with losses totaling $1,257,000 a year ago, he said. This reduction in losses is attributed to the time-locking restrictions and other limitations in the exposure of surplus cash imposed last year by underwriters and several bank supervisory authorities.

The sharp reduction in the material loss of money and securities resulting from bank robbery this year was "overshadowed by the killing of 2 bank employees, one bystander and 5 arresting officers," and since last August bank robbery also cost the lives of 15 criminals and caused physical injuries to 10 bank employees, 12 bystanders, 9 arresting officers and 8 bandits, a total of 62 casualties.

Investigations by the association's agents resulted in the arrest of 36 forgers, 42 bandits and one burglar, or 79 of the 141 bank criminals reported as being apprehended during the period.

SKATING PARTY

Last Thursday night after school the Junior class, Mr. Hunter and Miss Arends, took several pounds of weiners, and all the frills that go with them, and went to Lake Cornellia for an evening of skating. Some trouble was had because of a weak tire, but we finally arrived at our destination. A fire was soon built by some of our woodsmen, and we roasted weiners and ate pickles. (We did not toast said pickles.) After enjoying our savory repast, we retired to the skating rink. A few (?) spills and many thrills was the result of our heroic effort to maintain our equilibrium but no one was injured and a "good time was had by all".—Lyndon Kilgore.

FRESHMAN-SOPHOMORE PARTY

The freshmen entertained the sophomores at a weiner roast at Johnson's Hill Thursday evening. After the wiener roast, the freshmen challenged the sophomores to a ball-game. When darkness made it impossible to see the ball any longer, the freshmen reluctantly retired the losers. The freshman and sophomore sponsors, Miss Galbreth and Mr. Kingery accompanied the group.

BASE BALL TOURNAMENT

Last Friday at eight-thirty we baseball boys left for Thornton to play in a tournament being held there. We saw Goodell win from Latimer 5 to 0. Then at ten-thirty we played Meservey. The teams were evenly matched and at the end of the game Meservey was on the big end of a 3 to 2 score. We then knocked off for a chicken dinner, and what a dinner. We had all the water we wanted and a few dill pickles.

After dinner we went back to the diamond to watch Ventura and Swaledale fight it out. They played ten innings before Ventura won 2 to 1. Then Thornton and Rock Falls played the tightest game of the day, Thornton winning 1 to 0.

Saturday forenoon Goodell lost to Meservey by a 5 to 0 score. Then Thornton beat Ventura 10 to 7 in another ten inning game. In the afternoon Thornton and Meservey played for the title and Meservey won 9 to 5—Walter Klotzbach.

Miss Ford played the precessional and recessional, and musical numbers were given by the high school octet under the direction of Miss Arends.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building — Washington, D. C.

Washington.—On June 16, 1934, Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, rose in his place in the senate and presented for the Congressional Record a summary of accomplishments of the first regular session of congress under the New Deal. The vast amount of legislation enacted was analyzed and its importance to the country set forth. The one thing that was lacking in that summary was any reference to the Herculean effort of Senator Robinson. He took no credit for himself although it was everywhere realized that Senator Robinson had been the key man in accomplishing that great amount of work.

Robinson the Key Man

Congress still will be in session on June 16, 1935. Senator Robinson, of course, will not present a summary of legislative enactments by the current session until the closing day—and your guess is as good as mine as to when that will be. But after virtually five months of the current session, observers cannot help looking back to see what has been done. Comparisons can hardly be avoided.

We find from the records at the Capitol that a total of fifty laws of a public character have completed passage through congress and have received Presidential consideration. That number appears large—an average of ten pieces of legislation a month—but when the nature of the bills themselves is examined, a contrary conclusion must be reached.

I have reported to you heretofore some details of how congress has been balky. Undeniably, there has been stalling and delays accountable only in politics. There have been controversies over entirely minor and inconsequential matters. Individual representatives and senators having no claims to leadership either from ability or seniority have been able to block enactments in a fashion almost unknown except where congress has been at loggerheads with the Chief Executive.

Through all of these, I think it is fair to say that Senator Robinson has been the most vigorous fighter in behalf of the New Deal of any who maintains a position of prominence in the present administration. Instead of receiving credit, pats on the back, as he did a year ago, the Arkansas senator has been receiving some wholly unwarranted kicks in the pants. If there is to be a goat in congress through the failure of some of the highly controversial New Deal legislation it is liable to be Joe Robinson. If such is the result, it will demonstrate better than anything else the ingratitude of politics because observers agree that except for Senator Robinson the senate would be out of hand and President Roosevelt really would have a serious problem as regards the enactment of his program. It is my own belief that Senator Robinson deserves all of the acclaim which the New Dealers can heap upon him instead of criticism that is cropping up here and there.

Senator Robinson's job has been made much more difficult than a senate leader's job ought to be by constant messing from brain trust quarters. By the same token Senator McNary, of Oregon, who carries the title of Republican leader, has had numerous opportunities to give prominence to Republican doctrines. But Senator McNary has been just as quiet as Senator Robinson has been active.

So, when it is shown that only four important pieces of legislation have passed congress this session the blame, if there be blame, must be attributed not to the Democratic leadership, but to an undercurrent of objection to New Deal principles. The house under the speakership of Representative Byrns of Tennessee has performed as the house usually does where there is a preponderant majority by one party. It has obeyed Presidential instructions and has put through bills about as the White House desired. The obstacle has been the senate and in all probability it will continue to be troublesome ground for the administration.

Senate Is Balky

Borrowing the favorite phrase of a one-time Democratic candidate for President, "Let us look at the record." Up to the present four bills of national scope have passed. The five billion dollar works relief legislation was passed after a delay of two months; legislation extending the life of the Reconstruction Finance corporation was not controversial and was passed almost by unanimous vote, and the additional appropriation of $1,750,000,000 for the Home Owners Loan corporation brought little objection in its course through congress. The other national piece of legislation that has been finished is the soldiers' bonus, a measure highly objectionable to the President and therefore, after all, not completed legislation.

With regard to the other bills that have passed, none of them can be said to be of consequence. They are designated as public laws, distinguishing them from purely private bills of limited effect. Naturally, they did not provoke controversy.

But awaiting action we find such legislation as the proposal to extend the life of the National Recovery administration, the so-called social security bill, revision of the agricultural adjustment act to strengthen the hand of the Department of Agriculture, and the bitterly fought Roosevelt-Eccles banking reform measure. When action will come on any of these is highly problematical. It is also a matter of pure guesswork to predict in what form these measures will emerge from the Capitol.

Each of the four bills of national scope that is pending involves principles of a character that may precipitate a deadlock at any time. The senate in times past has been known to act with utmost speed and it is possible the differences over the legislation outlined above may be adjusted so that an early adjournment will result. The prospects, nevertheless, are entirely to the contrary. Indeed, it appears that congress is due to get a taste of Washington summer heat.

I am indebted to attaches of the senate for the following compilation of public laws, the passage of which is finally completed:

Dental Hygiene

The Road to Health

By DR. R. ALLEN GRIFFITH

DIET, TEETH, EXERCISE

MOST people feel that the condition of their own mouths and the condition of their children's mouths is their own affair. We should get away from this selfish, erroneous and dangerous attitude. With every breath from an unclean mouth millions of pathogenic micro-organisms easily capable of inoculating another person with a disease-producing germ are expelled from one to ten feet.

To the healthy individual it really matters little how many pathogenic varieties of micro-organisms there may be, or how prevalent they are, because man possesses a natural immunity to infections and is normally immune.

If this were not true, man would have been exterminated from the earth long ago by the myriads of microscopic foes always surrounding him. But just let the individual reduce his natural bodily resistance below a certain point, through fatigue, overeating, loss of sleep, worry, etc., and "some little bug will get you" soon.

The chief concern, therefore, of both the individual and society at large should be to maintain this natural immunity instead of trying to discover cures or remedies for natural conditions that are sure to follow a lowering of the natural resistance to disease. Every disease germ that enters the human system must enter through the mouth, nose or a break in the skin (with the exception of venereal diseases), and it is estimated that 90 per cent of all disease enters through the mouth and incubates in the mouth.

Should not a clean, healthy mouth then be the first consideration in the prevention of disease?

During the present generation the physician has proved that there is a direct connection between unclean mouths and the rapid increase in kidney, heart and circulatory diseases, formerly attributed to deranged metabolism, but now known to be due to a constitutional poisoning of the system from bacteria and their toxins.

Sanitation and hygiene can change the mouth from one of the most infected and unhygienic parts of the body to one that is wholesome, disease-free and clean, and eliminate it as a plague spot for the entire system.

A clean mouth will prevent disease. A suitable diet will insure a well nourished organism. Exercise will insure proper elimination. These three things will insure health, happiness and longevity.

MALNUTRITION

MANY articles have recently appeared in the newspapers in regard to malnutrition in school children. Insufficient food is generally supposed to be the only cause. Just at present the depression is blamed. But this condition has existed for many years. Too little food or improper food is of the utmost importance, not only to the children, as children, but for their adult life as well.

Several years ago the American Open Air School Journal said that of 548,000 school children examined in fifteen cities in the United States, about 4,000 were undernourished. It would seem that the various school boards or state governments, as a matter of political economy, as well as human mercy, would find some means to supply adequate food to growing children.

How can a child possibly be well nourished, no matter what quantity or quality of the food, if it is mixed with a fetid, decaying mass of food from cavities in the teeth with its millions of germs of putrefaction and pus germs from abscessed teeth? This constant drain of poisons into the intestinal tract causes stomach and intestinal troubles. Bacterial products are absorbed into the system and produce fevers, eye-strain, headaches, anemia, malaise and constipation.

The poisons from the mouth are insidious and slow in their action. Many can, and do withstand them for years, if the powers of resistance are high, but in time these poisons are sure to destroy a good digestion and undermine the system.

A child cannot be expected to develop into a healthy adult with a strong mind if it is deprived of efficient means of chewing its food properly, or if the food must pass through an infected, uncared-for mouth. Is it any wonder that such children are sickly and lacking in strength? Is it any wonder that they are not bright and intelligent and many times figure in the mentally deficient classes in school?

Where, but in the unclean mouth is found the germs of spinal meningitis, measles, diphtheria, and scarlet fever, ready to set up their specific diseases as soon as the resistance is lowered? These unfortunates are also a menace to the health of other children because of their susceptibility to infectious disease.

Taking, then, this specific knowledge as to the deleterious effect of a diseased mouth and malnutrition upon the child, school, state and nation into consideration, it becomes a great sociological problem that should appeal to all of those interested in child welfare. The problem of nutrition will be solved within the first three inches of the alimentary canal.

I Went to the Door and Was Almost Stunned to Find a Cloud of Mosquitoes Attacking Me From My Windward Side.

The Inventor

By James J. Montague

PERHAPS you have never lived next door to a genius. If such is the case you have missed something. However, don't worry about that. There are some experiences in life that one may miss with more profit than loss. One of them is being awakening every morning for a week by explosions like those of small dynamite blasts. Another is thrusting your face out of the front door to pick up the morning newspaper from the porch and having it completely covered with mosquitoes, and mosquitoes which have been newly aroused to a high pitch of fury against the whole human race. But, wait a minute, and I'll tell you about it.

One autumn I rented a small cottage in New England to escape hay fever, which makes life unbearable toward the close of the year for a member of my family. There were golf courses in the neighborhood and a trout stream close by. The cottage stood on the side of a mountain, with a range of higher mountains in view. It seemed an ideal spot. It would have been except for the genius.

He was a man of ideas, in fact, with so many ideas that one could not keep up with them. One was a theory that hay fever—from which he also suffered—could be cured by mosquitoes. I do not mean to say that he thought mosquitoes could go about treating hay fever patients as surgeons go about setting bones. The most ardent admirer of the mosquito—if the mosquito has any ardent admirers—would not credit him with any such powers. But it was his conviction that if you would treat mosquitoes with serum made from the pollen that causes hay fever, and send them forth to sting people, the pollen would be transferred to the sufferer, and he would thus, in time, become immune.

I had observed this man from time to time, after my arrival, bending over a little stagnant pond in his back yard. I was naturally curious to know what he was doing, but having been reared by careful parents, I did not go over and ask him impertinent questions. It could be really nothing to me that he liked this kind of a pastime, if such it was.

But, one morning when there was a breeze blowing across the pond toward my porch, I went to the door to pick up the New York newspaper which the R. F. D. carrier had delivered, and was almost stunned to find a cloud of mosquitoes attacking me from my windward side. Amazed and taken aback by this unsuspected assault, I stood there for a minute trying to fight the creatures off, and then backed in through the door, many numbers of them following me and biting savagely wherever they got a chance.

Ten or fifteen minutes I spent with a newspaper swatting the pests till the last of them was flattened out. I naturally wanted to go forth again and find out from whence they had come, and if possible, why. But there was a dark buzzing mass of them on the screen, so I remained indoors.

After breakfast there was a knock on the door, and a kindly faced old gentleman was standing by it when I opened it.

"Good morning," he said. "I hope you were not troubled by those insects. You see, I never thought they would get away. But, unfortunately, I lifted the screen over them carelessly and they escaped. I assure you it will not happen again."

"Were those your mosquitoes?" I inquired, trying not to betray any indignation.

"In a manner, yes, if any of nature's creature can be said to belong to a man. I was experimenting with them. You don't, by any chance, happen to be a hay fever sufferer?"

I told him that I was not, and was about to say that my wife was, when I thought it would hardly be wise to let this man know it.

"I can't say I'm sorry for that," said the visitor, "and I can't say I'm glad. But it would have been a marvelous test. If all those mosquitoes, or even 10 per cent of them had bitten you—and you had survived—you would have been immune to hay fever forever. It was the largest flock I ever gathered together, and if I had not been careless I might have done wonders with them."

I told him that I was sorry for his loss, but that I could not join in his sorrow over the escape of his pets. I was not, for easily understandable reasons, in a kindly mood. Nor did I regret his refusal to come into the house.

Several times after that I met him, walking along the roads, a distracted look on his face. Twice I saw him mooning around the golf course with a measuring tape, and setting little flags into the ground here and there. Once while he was thus occupied I almost drove a ball into his shoulder blade. I went up hurriedly to apologize, but he assured me that he should do the apologizing, as he had no rights on the course, but was merely trying some little experiments before he made a test.

"What kind of a test?" I inquired.

"I have an idea," he said, "that if this game could be played with small petards—small cannon, I should say—it would be very much more exciting and much less fatiguing than it is at present. I have in mind some experiments which I shall put into execution when the governors of the club give me their permission. Meanwhile I am working out some of my theories at home. But do not be alarmed. I shall be careful to cause you no such inconvenience as you suffered from the mosquitoes."

I thanked him as cordially as I could, and went on my way. The next morning I heard an explosion, something like that made by a dynamite blast when it has been well covered up. My wife and I changed our sleeping quarters to the rear of the house. But we got little sleep. Day after day the noise was repeated, four or five detonations in quick succession. We got to waking at daylight to wait for them, and were none too easy in our minds. I had no idea of how powerful this golf gun of his was, or when he was likely to hook or slice with it and land a missile in our bedroom.

Then, one morning, it happened. The projectile came in through one window and out the other, the resistance of the glass not giving it notable pause as it sped along. In less than five minutes he was at the front door, all apologies.

"I suppose," he said, "that this error in direction will result in having to give up my experiments, just as I was so near the goal. But, really, sir, I cannot continue annoying you thus all the time, can I?"

"I am convinced that you can, sir," I said politely, "but I sincerely hope you won't."
